"(B) The authority conferred by this paragraph may be utilized by any Federal savings association that acquires, by merger or consolidation, a Federal savings bank enjoying grandfather rights hereunder.

"(j) SUBSCRIPTION FOR SHARES.—[Repealed.]

"(k) DEPOSITORY OF PUBLIC MONEY.—When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, a savings association the deposits of which are insured by the Corporation shall be a depository of public money and may be employed as fiscal agent of the Government under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary and shall perform all such reasonable duties as fiscal agent of the Government as may be required of it. A savings association the deposits of which are insured by the Corporation may act as agent for any other instrumentality of the United States when designated for that purpose by such instrumentality, including services in connection with the collection of taxes and other obligations owed the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury may deposit public money in any such savings association, and shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

"(l) RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS.—A Federal savings association is authorized to act as trustee of any trust created or organized in the United States and forming part of a stock bonus, pension, or profit-sharing plan which qualifies or qualified for specific tax treatment under section 401(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and to act as trustee or custodian of an individual retirement account within the meaning of section 408 of such Code if the funds of such trust or account are invested only in savings accounts or deposits in such Federal savings association or in obligations or securities issued by such Federal savings association. All funds held in such fiduciary capacity by any Federal savings association may be commingled for appropriate purposes of investment, but individual records shall be kept by the fiduciary for each participant and shall show in proper detail all transactions engaged in under this paragraph.

"(m) BRANCHING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) No savings association incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia or organized in the District or doing business in the District shall establish any branch or move its principal office or any branch without the Director's prior written approval.

"(B) No savings association shall establish any branch in the District of Columbia or move its principal office or any branch in the District without the Director's prior written approval.

"(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection the term 'branch' means any office, place of business, or facility, other than the principal office as defined by the Director, of a savings association at which accounts are opened or payments are received or withdrawals are made, or any other office, place of business, or facility of a savings association defined by the Director as a branch within the meaning of such sentence.

"(n) TRUSTS.—

"(1) PERMITS.—The Director may grant by special permit to a Federal savings association applying therefor the right to act as trustee, executor, administrator, guardian, or in any other fiduciary capacity in which State banks, trust companies, or other corporations which compete with Federal savings associations are permitted to act under the laws of the State in which the Federal savings association is located. Subject to the regulations of the Director, service corporations may invest in State or federally chartered corporations which are located in the State in which the home office of the Federal savings association is located and which are engaged in trust activities.

"(2) SEGREGATION OF ASSETS.—A Federal savings association exercising any or all of the powers enumerated in this section shall segregate all assets held in any fiduciary capacity from the general assets of the association and shall keep a separate set of books and records showing in proper detail all transactions engaged in under this subsection. The State banking authority involved may have access to reports of examination made by the Director insofar as such reports relate to the trust department of such association but nothing in this subsection shall be construed as authorizing such State banking authority to examine the books, records, and assets of such associations.

"(3) PROHIBITIONS.—No Federal savings association shall receive in its trust department deposits of current funds subject to check or the deposit of checks, drafts, bills of exchange, or other items for collection or exchange purposes. Funds deposited or held in trust by the association awaiting investment shall be carried in a separate account and shall not be used by the association in the conduct of its business unless it shall first set aside in the trust department United States bonds or other securities approved by the Director.

"(4) SEPARATE LIEN.—In the event of the failure of a Federal savings association, the owners of the funds held in trust for investment shall have a lien on the bonds or other securities so set apart in addition to their claim against the estate of the association.

"(5) DEPOSITS.—Whenever the laws of a State require corporations acting in a fiduciary capacity to deposit securities with the State authorities for the protection of private or court trusts, Federal savings associations so acting shall be required to make similar deposits. Securities so deposited shall be held for the protection of private or court trusts, as provided by the State law. Federal savings associations in such cases shall not be required to execute the bond usually required of individuals if State corporations under similar circumstances are exempt from this requirement. Federal savings associations shall have power to execute such bond when so required by the laws of the State involved.

"(6) OATHS AND AFFIDAVITS.—In any case in which the laws of a State require that a corporation acting as trustee, executor, administrator, or in any capacity specified in this section, shall take an oath or make an affidavit, the president, vice president, cashier, or trust officer of such association may take the necessary oath or execute the necessary affidavit.

"(7) CERTAIN LOANS PROHIBITED.—It shall be unlawful for any Federal savings association to lend any officer, director, or employee any funds held in trust under the powers conferred by this section. Any officer, director, or employee making such loan, or to whom such loan is made, may be fined not more than $50,000 or twice the amount of that person's gain from the loan, whichever is greater, or may be imprisoned not more than 5 years, or may be both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

"(8) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—In reviewing applications for permission to exercise the powers enumerated in this section, the Director may consider—

"(A) the amount of capital of the applying Federal savings association,

"(B) whether or not such capital is sufficient under the circumstances of the case,

"(C) the needs of the community to be served, and

"(D) any other facts and circumstances that seem to it proper.

The Director may grant or refuse the application accordingly, except that no permit shall be issued to any association having capital less than the capital required by State law of State banks, trust companies, and corporations exercising such powers.

"(9) SURRENDER OF CHARTER.—(A) Any Federal savings association may surrender its right to exercise the powers granted under this subsection, and have returned to it any securities which it may have deposited with the State authorities, by filing with the Director a certified copy of a resolution of its board of directors indicating its intention to surrender its right.

"(B) Upon receipt of such resolution, the Director, if satisfied that such Federal savings association has been relieved in accordance with State law of all duties as trustee, executor, administrator, guardian or other fiduciary, may in the Director's discretion, issue to such association a certificate that such association is no longer authorized to exercise the powers granted by this subsection.

"(C) Upon the issuance of such a certificate by the Director, such Federal savings association (i) shall no longer be subject to the provisions of this section or the regulations of the Director made pursuant thereto, (ii) shall be entitled to have returned to it any securities which it may have deposited with State authorities, and (iii) shall not exercise thereafter any of the powers granted by this section without first applying for and obtaining a new permit to exercise such powers pursuant to the provisions of this section.

"(D) The Director may prescribe regulations necessary to enforce compliance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(10) REVOCATION.—(A) In addition to the authority conferred by other law, if, in the opinion of the Director, a Federal savings association is unlawfully or unsoundly exercising, or has unlawfully or unsoundly exercised, or has failed for a period of 5 consecutive years to exercise, the powers granted by this subsection or otherwise fails or has failed to comply with the requirements of this subsection, the Director may issue and serve upon the association a notice of intent to revoke the authority of the association to exercise the powers granted by this subsection. The notice shall contain a statement of the facts constituting the alleged unlawful or unsound exercise of powers, or failure to exercise powers, or failure to comply, and shall fix a time and place at which a hearing will be held to determine whether an order revoking authority to exercise such powers should issue against the association.

"(B) Such hearing shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of subsection (d)(1)(B), and subject to judicial review as therein provided, and shall be fixed for a date not earlier than 30 days and not later than 60 days after service of such notice unless the Director sets an earlier or later date at the request of any Federal savings association so served.

"(C) Unless the Federal savings association so served shall appear at the hearing by a duly authorized representative, it shall be deemed to have consented to the issuance of the revocation order. In the event of such consent, or if upon the record made at any such hearing, the Director shall find that any allegation specified in the notice of charges has been established, the Director may issue and serve upon the association an order prohibiting it from accepting any new or additional trust accounts and revoking authority to exercise any and all powers granted by this subsection, except that such order shall permit the association to continue to service all previously accepted trust accounts pending their expeditious divestiture or termination.

"(D) A revocation order shall become effective not earlier than the expiration of 30 days after service of such order upon the association so served (except in the case of a revocation order issued upon consent, which shall become effective at the time specified therein), and shall remain effective and enforceable, except to such extent as it is stayed, modified, terminated, or set aside by action of the Director or a reviewing court.

"(o) CONVERSION OF STATE SAVINGS BANKS.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this subsection and under regulations of the Director, the Director may authorize the conversion of a State-chartered savings bank that is a Bank Insurance Fund member into a Federal savings bank, if such conversion is not in contravention of State law, and provide for the organization, incorporation, operation, examination, and regulation of such institution.

"(2)(A) Any Federal savings bank chartered pursuant to this subsection shall continue to be a Bank Insurance Fund member until such time as it changes its status to a Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(B) The Director shall notify the Corporation of any application under this Act for conversion to a Federal charter by an institution insured by the Corporation, shall consult with the Corporation before disposing of the application, and shall notify the Corporation of the Director's determination with respect to such application.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the Corporation determines that conversion into a Federal stock savings bank or the chartering of a Federal stock savings bank is necessary to prevent the default of a savings bank it insures or to reopen a savings bank in default that it insured, or if the Corporation determines, with the concurrence of the Director, that severe financial conditions exist that threaten the stability of a savings bank insured by the Corporation and that such a conversion or charter is likely to improve the financial condition of such savings bank, the Corporation shall provide the Director with a certificate of such determination, the reasons therefor in conformance with the requirements of this Act, and the bank shall be converted or chartered by the Director, pursuant to the regulations thereof, from the time the Corporation issues the certificate.

"(D) A bank may be converted under subparagraph (C) only if the board of trustees of the bank—

"(i) has specified in writing that the bank is in danger of closing or is closed, or that severe financial conditions exist that threaten the stability of the bank and a conversion is likely to improve the financial condition of the bank; and

"(ii) has requested in writing that the Corporation use the authority of subparagraph (C).

"(E)(i) Before making a determination under subparagraph (D), the Corporation shall consult the State bank supervisor of the State in which the bank in danger of closing is chartered. The State bank supervisor shall be given a reasonable opportunity, and in no event less than 48 hours, to object to the use of the provisions of subparagraph (D).

"(ii) If the State supervisor objects during such period, the Corporation may use the authority of subparagraph (D) only by an affirmative vote of three-fourths of the Board of Directors. The Board of Directors shall provide the State supervisor, as soon as practicable, with a written certification of its determination.

"(3) A Federal savings bank chartered under this subsection shall have the same authority with respect to investments, operations, and activities, and shall be subject to the same restrictions, including those applicable to branching and discrimination, as would apply to it if it were chartered as a Federal savings bank under any other provision of this Act.

"(p) CONVERSIONS.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and consistent with the purposes of this Act, the Director may authorize (or in the case of a Federal savings association, require) the conversion of any mutual savings association or Federal mutual savings bank that is insured by the Corporation into a Federal stock savings association or Federal stock savings bank, or charter a Federal stock savings association or Federal stock savings bank to acquire the assets of, or merge with such a mutual institution under the regulations of the Director.

"(2) Authorizations under this subsection may be made only—

"(A) if the Director has determined that severe financial conditions exist which threaten the stability of an association and that such authorization is likely to improve the financial condition of the association,

"(B) when the Corporation has contracted to provide assistance to such association under section 13 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, or

"(C) to assist an institution in receivership.

"(3) A Federal savings bank chartered under this subsection shall have the same authority with respect to investments, operations and activities, and shall be subject to the same restrictions, including those applicable to branching and discrimination, as would apply to it if it were chartered as a Federal savings bank under any other provision of this Act, and may engage in any investment, activity, or operation that the institution it acquired was engaged in if that institution was a Federal savings bank, or would have been authorized to engage in had that institution converted to a Federal charter.

"(q) TYING ARRANGEMENTS.—(1) A savings association may not in any manner extend credit, lease, or sell property of any kind, or furnish any service, or fix or vary the consideration for any of the foregoing, on the condition or requirement—

"(A) that the customer shall obtain additional credit, property, or service from such savings association, or from any service corporation or affiliate of such association, other than a loan, discount, deposit, or trust service;

"(B) that the customer provide additional credit, property, or service to such association, or to any service corporation or affiliate of such association, other than those related to and usually provided in connection with a similar loan, discount, deposit, or trust service; and

"(C) that the customer shall not obtain some other credit, property, or service from a competitor of such association, or from a competitor of any service corporation or affiliate of such association, other than a condition or requirement that such association shall reasonably impose in connection with credit transactions to assure the soundness of credit.

"(2)(A) Any person may sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by reason of a violation of paragraph (1), under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity and under the rules governing such proceedings.

"(B) Upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue.

"(3) Any person injured by a violation of paragraph (1) may bring an action in any district court of the United States in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without regard to the amount in controversy, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, and shall be entitled to recover three times the amount of the damages sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. Any such action shall be brought within 4 years from the date of the occurrence of the violation.

"(4) Nothing contained in this subsection affects in any manner the right of the United States or any other party to bring an action under any other law of the United States or of any State, including any right which may exist in addition to specific statutory authority, challenging the legality of any act or practice which may be proscribed by this subsection. No regulation or order issued by the Director under this subsection shall in any manner constitute a defense to such action.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'loan' includes obligations and extensions or advances of credit.

"(r) OUT-OF-STATE BRANCHES.—(1) No Federal savings association may establish, retain, or operate a branch outside the State in which the Federal savings association has its home office, unless the association qualifies as a domestic building and loan association under section 7701(a)(19) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or meets the asset composition test imposed by subparagraph (c) of that section on institutions seeking so to qualify. No out-of-State branch so established shall be retained or operated unless the total assets of the Federal savings association attributable to all branches of the Federal savings association in that State would qualify the branches as a whole, were they otherwise eligible, for treatment as a domestic building and loan association under section 7701(a)(19).

"(2) The limitations of paragraph (1) shall not apply if—

"(A) the branch results from a transaction authorized under section 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act;

"(B) the branch was authorized for the Federal savings association prior to October 15, 1982;

"(C) the law of the State where the branch would be located would permit the branch to be established if the branch were a Federal savings association chartered by the State in which its home office is located; or

"(D) the branch was operated lawfully as a branch under State law prior to the association's conversion to a Federal charter.

"(3) The Director, for good cause shown, may allow Federal savings associations up to 2 years to comply with the requirements of this subsection.

"(s) MINIMUM CAPITAL REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Consistent with the purposes of section 908 of the International Lending Supervision Act of 1983 and the capital requirements established pursuant to such section by the appropriate Federal banking agencies (as defined in section 903(1) of such Act), the Director shall require all savings associations to achieve and maintain adequate capital by—

"(A) establishing minimum levels of capital for savings associations; and

"(B) using such other methods as the Director determines to be appropriate.

"(2) MINIMUM CAPITAL LEVELS MAY BE DETERMINED BY DIRECTOR CASE-BY-CASE.—The Director may, consistent with subsection (t), establish the minimum level of capital for a savings association at such amount or at such ratio of capital-to-assets as the Director determines to be necessary or appropriate for such association in light of the particular circumstances of the association.

"(3) UNSAFE OR UNSOUND PRACTICE.—In the Director's discretion, the Director may treat the failure of any savings association to maintain capital at or above the minimum level required by the Director under this subsection or subsection (t) as an unsafe or unsound practice.

"(4) DIRECTIVE TO INCREASE CAPITAL.—

"(A) PLAN MAY BE REQUIRED.—In addition to any other action authorized by law, including paragraph (3), the Director may issue a directive requiring any savings association which fails to maintain capital at or above the minimum level required by the Director to submit and adhere to a plan for increasing capital which is acceptable to the Director.

"(B) ENFORCEMENT OF PLAN.—Any directive issued and plan approved under subparagraph (A) shall be enforceable under section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to the same extent and in the same manner as an outstanding order which was issued under section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and has become final.

"(5) PLAN TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN OTHER PROCEEDINGS.—The Director may—

"(A) consider a savings association's progress in adhering to any plan required under paragraph (4) whenever such association or any affiliate of such association (including any company which controls such association) seeks the Director's approval for any proposal which would have the effect of diverting earnings, diminishing capital, or otherwise impeding such association's progress in meeting the minimum level of capital required by the Director; and

"(B) disapprove any proposal referred to in subparagraph (A) if the Director determines that the proposal would adversely affect the ability of the association to comply with such plan.

"(t) CAPITAL STANDARDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) REQUIREMENT FOR STANDARDS TO BE PRESCRIBED.—The Director shall, by regulation, prescribe and maintain uniformly applicable capital standards for savings associations. Those standards shall include—

"(i) a leverage limit;

"(ii) a tangible capital requirement; and

"(iii) a risk-based capital requirement.

"(B) COMPLIANCE.—A savings association is not in compliance with capital standards for purposes of this subsection unless it complies with all capital standards prescribed under this paragraph.

"(C) STRINGENCY.—The standards prescribed under this paragraph shall be no less stringent than the capital standards applicable to national banks.

"(D) DEADLINE FOR REGULATIONS.—The Director shall promulgate final regulations under this paragraph not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, and those regulations shall become effective not later than 120 days after the date of enactment.

"(2) CONTENT OF STANDARDS.—

"(A) LEVERAGE LIMIT.—The leverage limit prescribed under paragraph (1) shall require a savings association to maintain core capital in an amount not less than 3 percent of the savings association's total assets.

"(B) TANGIBLE CAPITAL REQUIREMENT.—The tangible capital requirement prescribed under paragraph (1) shall require a savings association to maintain tangible capital in an amount not less than 1.5 percent of the savings association's total assets.

"(C) RISK-BASED CAPITAL REQUIREMENT.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(C), the risk-based capital requirement prescribed under paragraph (1) may deviate from the risk-based capital standards applicable to national banks to reflect interest-rate risk or other risks, but such deviations shall not, in the aggregate, result in materially lower levels of capital being required of savings associations under the risk-based capital requirement than would be required under the risk-based capital standards applicable to national banks.

"(3) TRANSITION RULE.—

"(A) CERTAIN QUALIFYING SUPERVISORY GOODWILL INCLUDED IN CALCULATING CORE CAPITAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (9)(A), an eligible savings association may include qualifying supervisory goodwill in calculating core capital. The amount of qualifying supervisory goodwill that may be included may not exceed the applicable percentage of total assets set forth in the following table:

"For the following period:	The applicable percentage is:
Prior to January 1, 1992.....	1.500 percent
January 1, 1992–December 31, 1992.....	1.000 percent
January 1, 1993–December 31, 1993.....	0.750 percent
January 1, 1994–December 31, 1994.....	0.375 percent
Thereafter.....	0 percent

"(B) ELIGIBLE SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a savings association is an eligible savings association so long as the Director determines that—

"(i) the savings association's management is competent;

"(ii) the savings association is in substantial compliance with all applicable statutes, regulations, orders, and supervisory agreements and directives; and

"(iii) the savings association's management has not engaged in insider dealing, speculative practices, or any other activities that have jeopardized the association's safety and soundness or contributed to impairing the association's capital.

"(4) SPECIAL RULES FOR PURCHASED MORTGAGE SERVICING RIGHTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1)(C) and (9), the standards prescribed under paragraph (1) may permit a savings association to include in calculating capital for the purpose of the leverage limit and risk-based capital requirement prescribed under paragraph (1), on terms no less stringent than under both the capital standards applicable to State nonmember banks and (except as to the amount that may be included in calculating capital) the capital standards applicable to national banks, 90 percent of the fair market value of readily marketable purchased mortgage servicing rights.

"(B) TANGIBLE CAPITAL REQUIREMENT.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1)(C) and (9)(C), the standards prescribed under paragraph (1) may permit a savings association to include in calculating capital for the purpose of the tangible capital requirement prescribed under paragraph (1), on terms no less stringent than under both the capital standards applicable to State nonmember banks and (except as to the amount that may be included in calculating capital) the capital standards applicable to national banks, 90 percent of the fair market value of readily marketable purchased mortgage servicing rights.

"(C) PERCENTAGE LIMITATION PRESCRIBED BY FDIC.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(C) and subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this paragraph—

"(i) for the purpose of subparagraph (A), the maximum amount of purchased mortgage servicing rights that may be included in calculating capital under the leverage limit and the risk-based capital requirement prescribed under paragraph (1) may not exceed the amount that could be included if the savings association were an insured State nonmember bank; and

"(ii) for the purpose of subparagraph (B), the Corporation shall prescribe a maximum percentage of the tangible capital requirement that savings associations may satisfy by including purchased mortgage servicing rights in calculating such capital.

"(D) QUARTERLY VALUATION.—The fair market value of purchased mortgage servicing rights shall be determined not less often than quarterly.

"(5) SEPARATE CAPITALIZATION REQUIRED FOR CERTAIN SUBSIDIARIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In determining compliance with capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1), all of a savings association's investments in and extensions of credit to any subsidiary engaged in activities not permissible for a national bank shall be deducted from the savings association's capital.

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR AGENCY ACTIVITIES.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to a subsidiary engaged, solely as agent for its customers, in activities not permissible for a national bank unless the Corporation, in its sole discretion, determines that, in the interests of safety and soundness, this subparagraph should cease to apply to that subsidiary.

"(C) OTHER EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to any of the following:

"(i) MORTGAGE BANKING SUBSIDIARIES.—A savings association's investments in and extensions of credit to a subsidiary engaged solely in mortgage-banking activities.

"(ii) SUBSIDIARY INSURED DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—A savings association's investments in and extensions of credit to a subsidiary—

"(I) that is itself an insured depository institution or a company the sole investment of which is an insured depository institution, and

"(II) that was acquired by the parent insured depository institution prior to May 1, 1989.

"(iii) CERTAIN FEDERAL SAVINGS BANKS.—Any Federal savings association existing as a Federal savings association on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989—

"(I) that was chartered prior to October 15, 1982, as a savings bank or a cooperative bank under State law; or

"(II) that acquired its principal assets from an association that was chartered prior to October 15, 1982, as a savings bank or a cooperative bank under State law.

"(D) TRANSITION RULE.—

"(i) INCLUSION IN CAPITAL.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), if a savings association's subsidiary was, as of April 12, 1989, engaged in activities not permissible for a national bank, the savings association may include in calculating capital the applicable percentage (set forth in clause (ii)) of the lesser of—

"(I) the savings association's investments in and extensions of credit to the subsidiary on April 12, 1989; or

"(II) the savings association's investments in and extensions of credit to the subsidiary on the date as of which the savings association's capital is being determined.

"(ii) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of clause (i), the applicable percentage is as follows:

"For the following period:	The applicable percentage is:
Prior to July 1, 1990.....	100 percent
July 1, 1990–June 30, 1991..	90 percent
July 1, 1991–June 30, 1992..	75 percent
July 1, 1992–June 30, 1993..	60 percent
July 1, 1993–June 30, 1994..	40 percent
Thereafter.....	0 percent

"(iii) FDIC'S DISCRETION TO PRESCRIBE LESSER PERCENTAGE.—The Corporation may prescribe by order, with respect to a particular savings association, an applicable percentage less than that provided in clause (ii) if the Corporation determines, in its sole discretion, that the use of a greater percentage would, under the circumstances, constitute an unsafe or unsound practice or be likely to result in the association's being in an unsafe or unsound condition.

"(E) CONSOLIDATION OF SUBSIDIARIES NOT SEPARATELY CAPITALIZED.—In determining compliance with capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1), the assets and liabilities of each of a savings association's subsidiaries (other than any subsidiary described in subparagraph (C)(ii)) shall be consolidated with the savings association's assets and liabilities, unless all of the savings association's investments in and extensions of credit to the subsidiary are deducted from the savings association's capital pursuant to subparagraph (A).

"(6) CONSEQUENCES OF FAILING TO COMPLY WITH CAPITAL STANDARDS.—

"(A) PRIOR TO JANUARY 1, 1991.—Prior to January 1, 1991, the Director—

"(i) may restrict the asset growth of any savings association not in compliance with capital standards; and

"(ii) shall, beginning 60 days following the promulgation of final regulations under this subsection, require any savings association not in compliance with capital standards to submit a plan under subsection (s)(4)(A) that—

"(I) addresses the savings association's need for increased capital;

"(II) describes the manner in which the savings association will increase its capital so as to achieve compliance with capital standards;

"(III) specifies the types and levels of activities in which the savings association will engage;

"(IV) requires any increase in assets to be accompanied by an increase in tangible capital not less in percentage amount than the leverage limit then applicable;

"(V) requires any increase in assets to be accompanied by an increase in capital not less in percentage amount than required under the risk-based capital standard then applicable; and

"(VI) is acceptable to the Director.

"(B) ON OR AFTER JANUARY 1, 1991.—On or after January 1, 1991, the Director—

"(i) shall prohibit any asset growth by any savings association not in compliance with capital standards, except as provided in subparagraph (C); and

"(ii) shall require any savings association not in compliance with capital standards to comply with a capital directive issued by the Director (which may include such restrictions, including restrictions on the payment of dividends and on compensation, as the Director determines to be appropriate).

"(C) LIMITED GROWTH EXCEPTION.—The Director may permit any savings association that is subject to subparagraph (B) to increase its assets in an amount not exceeding the amount of net interest credited to the savings association's deposit liabilities if—

"(i) the savings association obtains the Director's prior approval;

"(ii) any increase in assets is accompanied by an increase in tangible capital in an amount not less than 6 percent of the increase in assets (or, in the Director's discretion if the leverage limit then applicable is less than 6 percent, in an amount equal to the increase in assets multiplied by the percentage amount of the leverage limit);

"(iii) any increase in assets is accompanied by an increase in capital not less in percentage amount than required under the risk-based capital standard then applicable;

"(iv) any increase in assets is invested in low-risk assets, such as first mortgage loans secured by 1- to 4-family residences and fully secured consumer loans; and

"(v) the savings association's ratio of core capital to total assets is not less than the ratio existing on January 1, 1991.

"(D) ADDITIONAL RESTRICTIONS IN CASE OF EXCESSIVE RISKS OR RATES.—The Director may restrict the asset growth of any savings association that the Director determines is taking excessive risks or paying excessive rates for deposits.

"(E) FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH PLAN, REGULATION, OR ORDER.—The Director shall treat as an unsafe and unsound practice any material failure by a savings association to comply with any plan, regulation, or order under this paragraph.

"(F) EFFECT ON OTHER REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—This paragraph does not limit any authority of the Director under other provisions of law.

"(7) EXEMPTION FROM CERTAIN SANCTIONS.—

"(A) APPLICATION FOR EXEMPTION.—Any savings association not in compliance with the capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1) may apply to the Director for an exemption from any applicable sanction or penalty for noncompliance which the Director may impose.

"(B) EFFECT OF GRANT OF EXEMPTION.—If the Director approves any savings association's application under subparagraph (A), the only sanction or penalty to be imposed by the Director for the savings association's failure to comply with the capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1) is the growth limitation contained in paragraph (6)(B) or paragraph (6)(C), whichever is applicable.

"(C) STANDARDS FOR APPROVAL OR DISAPPROVAL.—

"(i) APPROVAL.—The Director may approve an application for an exemption if the Director determines that—

"(I) such exemption would pose no significant risk to the affected deposit insurance fund;

"(II) the savings association's management is competent;

"(III) the savings association is in substantial compliance with all applicable statutes, regulations, orders, and supervisory agreements and directives; and

"(IV) the savings association's management has not engaged in insider dealing, speculative practices, or any other activities that have jeopardized the association's safety and soundness or contributed to impairing the association's capital.

"(ii) DENIAL OR REVOCATION OF APPROVAL.—The Director shall deny any application submitted under clause (i) and revoke any prior approval granted with respect to any such application if the Director determines that the association's failure to meet any capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1) is accompanied by—

"(I) a pattern of consistent losses;

"(II) substantial dissipation of assets;

"(III) evidence of imprudent management or business behavior;

"(IV) a material violation of any Federal law, any law of any State to which such association is subject, or any applicable regulation; or

"(V) any other unsafe or unsound condition or activity, other than the failure to meet such capital standards.

"(D) SUBMISSION OF PLAN REQUIRED.—Any application submitted under subparagraph (A) shall be accompanied by a plan which—

"(i) meets the requirements of paragraph (6)(A)(ii); and

"(ii) is acceptable to the Director.

"(E) FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH PLAN.—The Director shall treat as an unsafe and unsound practice any material failure by any savings association which has been granted an exemption under this paragraph to comply with the provisions of any plan submitted by such association under subparagraph (D).

"(F) EXEMPTION NOT AVAILABLE WITH RESPECT TO UNSAFE OR UNSOUND PRACTICES.—This paragraph does not limit any authority of the Director under any other provision of law, including section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, to take any appropriate action with respect to any unsafe or unsound practice or condition of any savings association, other than the failure of such savings association to comply with the capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1).

"(8) TEMPORARY AUTHORITY TO MAKE EXCEPTIONS FOR ELIGIBLE SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(C), the Director may, by order, make exceptions to the capital standards prescribed under paragraph (1) for eligible savings associations. No exception under this paragraph shall be effective after January 1, 1991.

"(B) STANDARDS FOR APPROVAL OR DISAPPROVAL.—In determining whether to grant an exception under subparagraph (A), the Director shall apply the same standards as apply to determinations under paragraph (7)(C).

"(9) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) CORE CAPITAL.—Unless the Director prescribes a more stringent definition, the term 'core capital' means core capital as defined by the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks, less any unidentifiable intangible assets, plus any purchased mortgage servicing rights excluded from the Comptroller's definition of capital but included in calculating the core capital of savings associations pursuant to paragraph (4).

"(B) QUALIFYING SUPERVISORY GOODWILL.—The term 'qualifying supervisory goodwill' means supervisory goodwill existing on April 12, 1989, amortized on a straightline basis over the shorter of—

"(i) 20 years, or

"(ii) the remaining period for amortization in effect on April 12, 1989.

"(C) TANGIBLE CAPITAL.—The term 'tangible capital' means core capital minus any intangible assets (as intangible assets are defined by the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks).

"(D) TOTAL ASSETS.—The term 'total assets' means total assets (as total assets are defined by the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks) adjusted in the same manner as total assets would be adjusted in determining compliance with the leverage limit applicable to national banks if the savings association were a national bank.

"(10) USE OF COMPTROLLER'S DEFINITIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The standards prescribed under paragraph (1) shall include all relevant substantive definitions established by the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE.—If the Comptroller of the Currency has not made effective regulations defining core capital or establishing a risk-based capital standard, the Director shall use the definition and standard contained in the Comptroller's most recently published final regulations.

"(u) LIMITS ON LOANS TO ONE BORROWER.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 5200 of the Revised Statutes shall apply to savings associations in the same manner and to the same extent as it applies to national banks.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a savings association may make loans to one borrower under one of the following clauses:

"(i) for any purpose, not to exceed $500,000; or

"(ii) to develop domestic residential housing units, not to exceed the lesser of $30,000,000 or 30 percent of the savings association's unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus, if—

"(I) the purchase price of each single family dwelling unit the development of which is financed under this clause does not exceed $500,000;

"(II) the savings association is and continues to be in compliance with the fully phased-in capital standards prescribed under subsection (t);

"(III) the Director, by order, permits the savings association to avail itself of the higher limit provided by this clause;

"(IV) loans made under this clause to all borrowers do not, in aggregate, exceed 150 percent of the savings association's unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus; and

"(V) such loans comply with all applicable loan-to-value requirements.

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each association shall make reports of conditions to the Director which shall be in a form prescribed by the Director and shall contain—

"(A) information sufficient to allow the identification of potential interest rate and credit risk;

"(B) a description of any assistance being received by the association, including the type and monetary value of such assistance;

"(C) the identity of all subsidiaries and affiliates of the association;

"(D) the identity, value, type, and sector of investment of all equity investments of the associations and subsidiaries; and

"(E) other information that the Director may prescribe.

"(2) PUBLIC DISCLOSURE.—

"(A) Reports required under paragraph (1) and all information contained therein shall be available to the public upon request, unless the Director determines—

"(i) that a particular item or classification of information should not be made public in order to protect the safety or soundness of the institution concerned or institutions concerned, the Savings Association Insurance Fund; or

"(ii) that public disclosure would not otherwise be in the public interest.

"(B) Any determination made by the Director under subparagraph (A) not to permit the public disclosure of information shall be made in writing, and if the Director restricts any item of information for savings institutions generally, the Director shall disclose the reason in detail in the Federal Register.

"(C) The Director's determinations under subparagraph (A) shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(3) ACCESS BY CERTAIN PARTIES.—

"(A) Notwithstanding paragraph (2), the persons described in subparagraph (B) shall not be denied access to any information contained in a report of condition, subject to reasonable requirements of confidentiality. Those requirements shall not prevent such information from being transmitted to the Comptroller General of the United States for analysis.

"(B) The following persons are described in this subparagraph for purposes of subparagraph (A):

"(i) the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and their designees; and

"(ii) the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and their designees.

"(4) FIRST TIER PENALTIES.—Any savings association which—

"(A) maintains procedures reasonably adapted to avoid any inadvertent and unintentional error and, as a result of such an error—

"(i) fails to submit or publish any report or information required by the Director under paragraph (1) or (2), within the period of time specified by the Director; or

"(ii) submits or publishes any false or misleading report or information; or

"(B) inadvertently transmits or publishes any report which is minimally late, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $2,000 for each day during which such failure continues or such false or misleading information is not corrected. The savings association shall have the burden of proving by a preponderence of the evidence that an error was inadvertent and unintentional and that a report was inadvertently transmitted or published late.

"(5) SECOND TIER PENALTIES.—Any savings association which—

"(A) fails to submit or publish any report or information required by the Director under paragraph (1) or (2), within the period of time specified by the Director; or

"(B) submits or publishes any false or misleading report or information, in a manner not described in paragraph (4) shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $20,000 for each day during which such failure continues or such false or misleading information is not corrected.

"(6) THIRD TIER PENALTIES.—If any savings association knowingly or with reckless disregard for the accuracy of any information or report described in paragraph (5) submits or publishes any false or misleading report or information, the Director may assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 or 1 percent of total assets, whichever is less, per day for each day during which such failure continues or such false or misleading information is not corrected.

"(7) ASSESSMENT.—Any penalty imposed under paragraph (4), (5), or (6) shall be assessed and collected by the Director in the manner provided in subparagraphs (E), (F), (G), and (I) of section 8(i)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (for penalties imposed under such section), and any such assessment (including the determination of the amount of the penalty) shall be subject to the provisions of such subsection.

"(8) HEARING.—Any savings association against which any penalty is assessed under this subsection shall be afforded a hearing if such savings association submits a request for such hearing within 20 days after the issuance of the notice of assessment. Section 8(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act shall apply to any proceeding under this subsection.

"SEC. 6. LIQUID ASSET REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The purpose of this section is to provide a means for creating effective and flexible liquidity in savings associations which can be increased when mortgage money is plentiful, maintained in easily liquidated instruments, and reduced to add to the flow of funds to the mortgage market in periods of credit stringency. More flexible liquidity will help support sound mortgage credit and a more stable supply of such credit.

"(b) MAINTENANCE OF ACCOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Every savings association shall maintain the aggregate amount of its assets of the following types at not less than such amount as, in the opinion of the Director, is appropriate:

"(A) cash;

"(B) balances maintained in a Federal reserve bank or passed through a Federal home loan bank or another depository institution to a Federal reserve bank pursuant to the Federal Reserve Act; and

"(C) to such extent as the Director may approve for the purposes of this section—

"(i) time and savings deposits in Federal home loan banks, institutions which are, or are eligible to become, members thereof, and commercial banks;

"(ii) such obligations, including such special obligations, of the United States, a State, any territory or possession of the United States, or a political subdivision, agency, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, and bankers' acceptances, as the Director may approve;

"(iii) shares or certificates of any open-end management investment company which is registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Investment Company Act of 1940 and the portfolio of which is restricted by such investment company's investment policy, changeable only if authorized by shareholder vote, solely to any of the obligations or other investments enumerated in subparagraph (A) and in clauses (i), (ii), (iv), (v), (vi), and (vii) of this subparagraph;

"(iv) liquid, highly rated corporate debt obligations with 3 years or less remaining until maturity;

"(v) highly rated commercial paper with 270 days or less remaining until maturity;

"(vi) mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934)—

"(I) that have one year or less remaining until maturity; or

"(II) that are subject to an agreement (including a repurchase agreement, put option, right of redemption, or takeout commitment) that requires another person to purchase the securities within a period that does not exceed one year, and that person is an insured depository institution (as defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) that is in compliance with applicable capital standards, a primary dealer in United States Government securities, or a broker or dealer registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; and

"(vii) mortgage loans on the security of a first lien on residential real property, if the mortgage loans qualify as backing for mortgage-backed securities issued by the Federal National Mortgage Association or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Association or guaranteed by the Government National Mortgage Association, and either—

"(I) the mortgage loans have one year or less remaining until maturity, or

"(II) the mortgage loans are subject to an agreement (including a repurchase agreement, put option, right of redemption, or takeout commitment) that requires another person to purchase the loans within a period that does not exceed one year, and that person is an insured depository institution (as defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) that is in compliance with applicable capital standards, a primary dealer in United States Government securities, or a broker or dealer registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The requirement prescribed by the Director pursuant to this subsection (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'liquidity requirement') may not be less than 4 percent or more than 10 percent of the obligation of the institution on withdrawable accounts and borrowings payable on demand or with unexpired maturities of one year or less. The Director shall prescribe regulations to implement the provisions of this subsection.

"(c) CALCULATION.—The amount of any savings association's liquidity requirement, and any deficiency in compliance therewith, shall be calculated as the Director shall prescribe. The Director may prescribe different liquidity requirements, within the limitations specified herein, for different classes of savings associations, and for such purposes the Director is authorized to classify savings associations according to type, size, location, rate of withdrawals, or on such other basis or bases of differentiation as the Director may deem to be reasonably necessary or appropriate for the purposes of this section.

"(d) DEFICIENCY ASSESSMENTS.—For any deficiency in compliance with the liquidity requirements, the Director may, in the Director's discretion, assess a penalty consisting of the payment by the institution of such sum as may be assessed by the Director but not in excess of a rate equal to the highest rate on Federal home loan bank advances of one year or less, plus 2 percent per year, on the amount of the deficiency for the period with respect to which the deficiency existed. Any penalty assessed under this subsection against a savings association shall be paid to the Director. The Director may authorize or require that, at any time before collection thereof, and whether before or after the bringing of any action or other legal proceeding, the obtaining of any judgment or other recovery, or the issuance or levy of any execution or other legal process therefor, and with or without consideration, any such penalty or recovery be compromised, remitted, or mitigated in whole or part. The penalties authorized under this subsection are in addition to all remedies and sanctions otherwise available.

"(e) REDUCTION OR SUSPENSION.—Whenever the Director deems it advisable in order to enable a savings association to meet withdrawals or to pay obligations, the Director may, to such extent and subject to such conditions as the Director may prescribe, permit the savings association to reduce its liquidity below the minimum amount. Whenever the Director determines that conditions of national emergency or unusual economic stress exist, the Director may suspend any part or all of the liquidity requirements hereunder for such period as the Director may prescribe. Any such suspension, unless sooner terminated by its terms or by the Director, shall terminate at the expiration of 90 days next after its commencement. The preceding sentence does not prevent the Director from again exercising, before, at, or after any such termination, the authority conferred by this subsection.

"(f) REGULATING AUTHORITY.—The Director is authorized to issue such regulations, including definitions of terms used in this section, to make such examinations, and to conduct such investigations as the Director deems necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this section. The reasonable cost of any such examination or investigation, as determined by the Director, shall be paid by the association.

"SEC. 7. APPLICABILITY.

"The provisions of this Act shall apply to the United States and to Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands.

"SEC. 8. DISTRICT ASSOCIATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall, with respect to all incorporated or unincorporated building, building or loan, building and loan, or homestead associations, and similar institutions, of or transacting or doing business in the District of Columbia, or maintaining any office in the District of Columbia (other than Federal savings associations), have the same powers and functions as to examination, operation, and regulation as the Director has with respect to Federal savings associations.

"(b) ADDITIONAL POWERS.—Any such association or institution incorporated under the laws of, or organized in, the District of Columbia shall have in addition to any existing statutory authority such statutory authority as is vested in Federal savings associations.

"(c) CHARTER AMENDMENTS.—Charters, certificates of incorporation, articles of incorporation, constitutions, bylaws, or other organic documents of associations or institutions referred to in subsection (b) of this section may, without regard to anything contained therein or otherwise, be amended in such manner and to such extent and upon such votes if any as the Director may by regulation or otherwise provide.

"(d) LIMITATION.—Nothing in this section shall cause, or permit the Director to cause, District of Columbia associations to be or become Federal savings associations, or require the Director to impose on District of Columbia associations the same regulations as are imposed on Federal savings associations.

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), if any affiliate of any savings association—

"(A) refuses to pay any assessment under subsection (b); or

"(B) fails to pay any such assessment before the end of the 60-day period beginning on the date of the assessment, the Director may assess such cost against, and collect such cost from, such savings association.

"(2) AFFILIATE OF MORE THAN 1 SAVINGS ASSOCIATION.—If any affiliate referred to in paragraph (1) is an affiliate of more than 1 savings association, the assessment with respect to the affiliate against, and collected from, any affiliated savings association in such proportions as the Director may prescribe.

"(d) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY FOR AFFILIATE'S REFUSAL TO COOPERATE.—

"(1) PENALTY IMPOSED.—If any affiliate of any savings association—

"(A) refuses to permit any examiner appointed by the Director to make an examination; or

"(B) refuses to provide any information required to be disclosed in the course of any examination, the savings association shall forfeit and pay a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each day that any such refusal continues.

"(2) ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION.—Any penalty imposed under paragraph (1) shall be assessed and collected by the Director, in the manner provided in section 8(i)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(e) REGULATIONS.—Only the Director may prescribe regulations with respect to—

"(1) the computation of, and the assessment for, the cost of conducting examinations pursuant to this section; and

"(2) the collection and use of such assessments and any fees under this section.

Such regulations may establish formulas to determine a fee or schedule of fees to cover the costs of examinations and also to cover the cost of processing applications, filings, notices, and requests for approvals by the Director or the Director's designee.

"(f) COLLECTION THROUGH FDIC OR FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS.—The Corporation or the Federal home loan banks shall, upon request of and by agreement with the Director, collect fees and assessments on behalf of the Director and be reimbursed for the actual cost of collection.

"(g) COSTS OF OTHER EXAMINATIONS.—

"(1) EXAMINATION OF FIDUCIARY ACTIVITIES.—In addition to any assessment imposed pursuant to subsection (a), the cost of conducting examinations of fiduciary activities of savings associations which exercise fiduciary powers (including savings associations or similar institutions in the District of Columbia) shall be assessed by the Director against such savings associations (or similar institutions).

"(2) EXAMINATIONS IN EXCESS OF 2 PER CALENDAR YEAR.—If any savings association or affiliate of a savings association is examined by the Director, or the Corporation, as the case may be, more than 2 times in any calendar year, the cost of conducting such additional examinations shall be assessed, in addition to any assessment imposed pursuant to subsection (a), by the Director or the Corporation, as the case may be, against such savings association or affiliate.

"(h) ADDITIONAL INFORMATION.—Any savings association and any affiliate of any savings association shall provide the Director with access to any information or report with respect to any examination made by any public regulatory authority and furnish any additional information with respect thereto as the Director may require.

"(i) TREATMENT OF EXAMINATION ASSESSMENTS.—

"(1) DEPOSITS.—Amounts received by the Director from assessments under this section (other than an assessment under subsection (d)(2)) or section 10(b)(4) may be deposited in the manner provided in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes with respect to assessments by the Comptroller of the Currency.

"(2) ASSESSMENTS ARE NOT GOVERNMENT FUNDS.—The amounts received by the Director from any assessment under this section shall not be construed to be Government or public funds or appropriated money.

"(3) ASSESSMENTS ARE NOT SUBJECT TO APPORTIONMENT OF FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the amounts received by the Director from any assessment under this section shall not be subject to apportionment for the purpose of chapter 15 of title 31, United States Code, or under any other authority.

"(j) PROCESSING FEE.—The Director may, in the Director's sole discretion, assess against any person that submits to the Director an application, filing, notice, or request a fee to cover the cost of processing such submission.

"(k) FEES FOR EXAMINATIONS AND SUPERVISORY ACTIVITIES.—The Director may assess against institutions for which the Director is the appropriate Federal banking agency, within the meaning of section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, fees to fund the direct and indirect expenses of the Office. Such fees shall be imposed in proportion of the assets or resources of the institutions. The fees may be imposed more frequently than annually at the discretion of the Director. The annual rate of such fees shall be the same for all institutions subject to such fees.

"(l) WORKING CAPITAL.—The Director is authorized to impose fees and assessments pursuant to subsections (a), (b), (e), and (k) of this section, in excess of actual expenses for any given year, to permit the Director to maintain a working capital fund. The Director shall remit to the payors of such fees and assessments any funds collected in excess of what he deems necessary to maintain such working capital fund.

"(m) USE OF FUNDS.—The Director is authorized to use the combined resources retained through fees and assessments imposed pursuant to this section to pay all direct and indirect salary and administrative expenses of the Office, including contracts and purchases of property and services, and the direct and indirect expenses of the examinations and supervisory activities of the Office.

"(5) GRACE PERIOD TO ACHIEVE COMPLIANCE.—If any savings association referred to in paragraph (3) fails to maintain the status of such association as a qualified thrift lender, the Director may allow, for good cause shown, any company that controls such association (or any subsidiary of such company which is not a savings association) up to 3 years to comply with the limitations contained in paragraph (1)(C).

"(6) SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CERTAIN COMPANIES AFFECTED BY 1987 AMENDMENTS.—

"(A) EXCEPTION TO 2-YEAR GRACE PERIOD FOR ACHIEVING COMPLIANCE.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(C), any company which received approval under subsection (e) of this section to acquire control of a savings association between March 5, 1987, and August 10, 1987, shall not continue any business activity other than an activity described in paragraph (2) after August 10, 1987.

"(B) EXEMPTION FOR ACTIVITIES LAWFULLY ENGAGED IN BEFORE MARCH 5, 1987.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(C) and subject to subparagraphs (C) and (D), any savings and loan holding company which received approval, before March 5, 1987, under subsection (e) of this section to acquire control of a savings association may engage, directly or through any subsidiary (other than a savings association subsidiary of such company), in any activity in which such company or such subsidiary was lawfully engaged on such date.

"(C) TERMINATION OF SUBPARAGRAPH (B) EXEMPTION.—The exemption provided under subparagraph (B) for activities engaged in by any savings and loan holding company or a subsidiary of such company (which is not a savings association) which would otherwise be prohibited under paragraph (1)(C) shall terminate with respect to such activities of such company or subsidiary upon the occurrence (after August 10, 1987) of any of the following:

"(i) The savings and loan holding company acquires control of a bank or an additional savings association (other than a savings association acquired pursuant to section 13(c) or 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act or section 406(f) or 408(m) of the National Housing Act).

"(ii) Any savings association subsidiary of the savings and loan holding company fails to qualify as a domestic building and loan association under section 7701(a)(19) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(iii) The savings and loan holding company engages in any business activity—

"(I) which is not described in paragraph (2); and

"(II) in which it was not engaged on March 5, 1987.

"(iv) Any savings association subsidiary of the savings and loan holding company increases the number of locations from which such savings association conducts business after March 5, 1987 (other than an increase which occurs in connection with a transaction under section 13(c) or (k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act or section 408(m) of the National Housing Act.

"(v) Any savings association subsidiary of the savings and loan holding company permits any overdraft (including an intraday overdraft), or incurs any such overdraft in its account at a Federal Reserve bank, on behalf of an affiliate, unless such overdraft is the result of an inadvertent computer or accounting error that is beyond the control of both the savings association subsidiary and the affiliate.

"(D) ORDER BY DIRECTOR TO TERMINATE SUBPARAGRAPH (B) ACTIVITY.—Any activity described in subparagraph (B) may also be terminated by the Director, after opportunity for hearing, if the Director determines, having due regard for the purposes of this title, that such action is necessary to prevent conflicts of interest or unsound practices or is in the public interest.

"(7) FOREIGN SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, any savings and loan holding company organized under the laws of a foreign country as of June 1, 1984 (including any subsidiary thereof which is not a savings association), which controls a single savings association on August 10, 1987, shall not be subject to this subsection with respect to any activities of such holding company which are conducted exclusively in a foreign country.

"(8) EXEMPTION FOR BANK HOLDING COMPANIES.—Except for paragraph (1)(A), this subsection shall not apply to any company that is treated as a bank holding company for purposes of section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, or any of its subsidiaries.

"(d) TRANSACTIONS WITH AFFILIATES.—Transactions between any subsidiary savings association of a savings and loan holding company and any affiliate (of such savings association subsidiary) shall be subject to the limitations and prohibitions specified in section 11 of this Act.

"(e) ACQUISITIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall be unlawful for—

"(A) any savings and loan holding company directly or indirectly, or through one or more subsidiaries or through one or more transactions—

"(i) to acquire, except with the prior written approval of the Director, the control of a savings association or a savings and loan holding company, or to retain the control of such an association or holding company acquired or retained in violation of this section as heretofore or hereafter in effect;

"(ii) to acquire, except with the prior written approval of the Director, by the process of merger, consolidation, or purchase of assets, another savings association or a savings and loan holding company, or all or substantially all of the assets of any such association or holding company;

"(iii) to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, or to retain more than 5 percent of the voting shares of a savings association not a subsidiary, or of a savings and loan holding company not a subsidiary, or in the case of a multiple savings and loan holding company (other than a company described in subsection (c)(8)), to so acquire or retain more than 5 percent of the voting shares of any company not a subsidiary which is engaged in any business activity other than the activities specified in subsection (c)(2). This clause shall not apply to shares of a savings association or of a savings and loan holding company—

"(I) held as a bona fide fiduciary (whether with or without the sole discretion to vote such shares);

"(II) held temporarily pursuant to an underwriting commitment in the normal course of an underwriting business;

"(III) held in an account solely for trading purposes;

"(IV) over which no control is held other than control of voting rights acquired in the normal course of a proxy solicitation;

"(V) acquired in securing or collecting a debt previously contracted in good faith, during the 2-year period beginning on the date of such acquisition or for such additional time (not exceeding 3 years) as the Director may permit if the Director determines that such an extension will not be detrimental to the public interest;

"(VI) acquired under section 408(m) of the National Housing Act or section 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act;

"(VII) held by any insurance company, as defined in section 2(a)(17) of the Investment Company Act of 1940, except as provided in paragraph (6);

"(VIII) acquired pursuant to a qualified stock issuance if such purchase is approved by the Director under subsection (q)(1)(D); except that the aggregate amount of shares held under this clause (other than under subclauses (I), (II), (III), (IV), and (VI)) may not exceed 15 percent of all outstanding shares or of the voting power of a savings association or savings and loan holding company; or

"(iv) to acquire the control of an uninsured institution, or to retain for more than one year after February 14, 1968, or from the date on which such control was acquired, whichever is later, except that the Director may upon application by such company extend such one-year period from year to year, for an additional period not exceeding 3 years, if the Director finds such extension is warranted and is not detrimental to the public interest;

"(B) any other company, without the prior written approval of the Director, directly or indirectly, or through one or more subsidiaries or through one or more transactions, to acquire the control of one or more savings associations, except that such approval shall not be required in connection with the control of a savings association, (i) acquired by devise under the terms of a will creating a trust which is excluded from the definition of 'savings and loan holding company' under subsection (a) of this section, or (ii) acquired in connection with a reorganization in which a person or group of persons, having had control of a savings association for more than 3 years, vests control of that association in a newly formed holding company subject to the control of the same person or group of persons. The Director shall approve an acquisition of a savings association under this subparagraph unless the Director finds the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the company and association involved to be such that the acquisition would be detrimental to the association or the insurance risk of the Savings Association Insurance Fund or Bank Insurance Fund, and shall render a decision within 90 days after submission to the Director of the complete record on the application.

"(2) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The Director shall not approve any acquisition under subparagraph (A)(i) or (A)(ii), or of more than one savings association under subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1) of this subsection, any acquisition of stock in connection with a qualified stock issuance, any acquisition under paragraph (4)(A), or any transaction under section 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, except in accordance with this paragraph. In every case, the Director shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the company and association involved, the effect of the acquisition on the association, the insurance risk to the Savings Association Insurance Fund or the Bank Insurance Fund, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served, and shall render a decision within 90 days after submission to the Director of the complete record on the application. Before approving any such acquisition, except a transaction under section 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the Director shall request from the Attorney General and consider any report rendered within 30 days on the competitive factors involved. The Director shall not approve any proposed acquisition—

"(A) which would result in a monopoly, or which would be in furtherance of any combination or conspiracy to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize the savings and loan business in any part of the United States, or

"(B) the effect of which in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition, or tend to create a monopoly, or which in any other manner would be in restraint of trade, unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed acquisition are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the acquisition in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

"(3) INTERSTATE ACQUISITIONS.—No acquisition shall be approved by the Director under this subsection which will result in the formation by any company, through one or more subsidiaries or through one or more transactions, of a multiple savings and loan holding company controlling savings associations in more than one State, unless—

"(A) such company, or a savings association subsidiary of such company, is authorized to acquire control of a savings association subsidiary, or to operate a home or branch office, in the additional State or States pursuant to section 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act;

"(B) such company controls a savings association subsidiary which operated a home or branch office in the additional State or States as of March 5, 1987; or

"(C) the statutes of the State in which the savings association to be acquired is located permit a savings association chartered by such State to be acquired by a savings association chartered by the State where the acquiring savings association or savings and loan holding company is located or by a holding company that controls such a State chartered savings association, and such statutes specifically authorize such an acquisition by language to that effect and not merely by implication.

"(4) ACQUISITIONS BY CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (h)(2), any director or officer of a savings and loan holding company, or any individual who owns, controls, or holds with power to vote (or holds proxies representing) more than 25 percent of the voting shares of such holding company, may acquire control of any savings association not a subsidiary of such savings and loan holding company with the prior written approval of the Director.

"(B) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN HOLDING COMPANIES.—If any individual referred to in subparagraph (A) controls more than 1 savings and loan holding company or more than 1 savings association, any savings and loan holding company controlled by such individual shall be subject to the activities limitations contained in subsection (c) to the same extent such limitations apply to multiple savings and loan holding companies, unless all or all but 1 of the savings associations (including any institution deemed to be a savings association under subsection (1) of this section) controlled directly or indirectly by such individual was acquired pursuant to an acquisition described in subclause (I) or (II) of subsection (c)(3)(B)(i).

"(5) ACQUISITIONS PURSUANT TO CERTAIN SECURITY INTERESTS.—This subsection and subsection (c)(2) of this section do not apply to any savings and loan holding company which acquired the control of a savings association or of a savings and loan holding company pursuant to a pledge or hypothecation to secure a loan, or in connection with the liquidation of a loan, made in the ordinary course of business. It shall be unlawful for any such company to retain such control for more than one year after February 14, 1968, or from the date on which such control was acquired, whichever is later, except that the Director may upon application by such company extend such one-year period from year to year, for an additional period not exceeding 3 years, if the Director finds such extension is warranted and would not be detrimental to the public interest.

"(6) SHARES HELD BY INSURANCE AFFILIATES.—Shares described in clause (iii)(VII) of paragraph (1)(A) shall not be excluded for purposes of clause (iii) of such paragraph if—

"(A) all shares held under such clause (iii)(VII) by all insurance company affiliates of such savings association or savings and loan holding company in the aggregate exceed 5 percent of all outstanding shares or of the voting power of the savings association or savings and loan holding company; or

"(B) such shares are acquired or retained with a view to acquiring, exercising, or transferring control of the savings association or savings and loan holding company.

"(f) DECLARATION OF DIVIDEND.—Every subsidiary savings association of a savings and loan holding company shall give the Director not less than 30 days' advance notice of the proposed declaration by its directors of any dividend on its guaranty, permanent, or other nonwithdrawable stock. Such notice period shall commence to run from the date of receipt of such notice by the Director. Any such dividend declared within such period, or without the giving of such notice to the Director, shall be invalid and shall confer no rights or benefits upon the holder of any such stock.

"(g) ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director is authorized to issue such regulations and orders as the Director deems necessary or appropriate to enable the Director to administer and carry out the purposes of this section, and to require compliance therewith and prevent evasions thereof.

"(2) INVESTIGATIONS.—The Director may make such investigations as the Director deems necessary or appropriate to determine whether the provisions of this section, and regulations and orders thereunder, are being and have been complied with by savings and loan holding companies and subsidiaries and affiliates thereof. For the purpose of any investigation under this section, the Director may administer oaths and affirmations, issue subpenas, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memorandums, or other records which may be relevant or material to the inquiry. The attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in any State. The Director may apply to the United States district court for the judicial district (or the United States court in any territory) in which any witness or company subpenaed resides or carries on business, for enforcement of any subpena issued pursuant to this paragraph, and such courts shall have jurisdiction and power to order and require compliance.

"(3) PROCEEDINGS.—(A) In any proceeding under subsection (a)(2)(D) or under paragraph (5) of this section, the Director may administer oaths and affirmations, take or cause to be taken depositions, and issue subpenas. The Director may make regulations with respect to any such proceedings. The attendance of witnesses and the production of documents provided for in this paragraph may be required from any place in any State or in any territory at any designated place where such proceeding is being conducted. Any party to such proceedings may apply to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or the United States district court for the judicial district or the United States court in any territory in which such proceeding is being conducted, or where the witness resides or carries on business, for enforcement of any subpena issued pursuant to this paragraph, and such courts shall have jurisdiction and power to order and require compliance therewith. Witnesses subpenaed under this section shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"(B) Any hearing provided for in subsection (a)(2)(D) or under paragraph (5) of this section shall be held in the Federal judicial district or in the territory in which the principal office of the association or other company is located unless the party afforded the hearing consents to another place, and shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"(4) INJUNCTIONS.—Whenever it appears to the Director that any person is engaged or has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this section or of any regulation or order thereunder, the Director may bring an action in the proper United States district court, or the United States court of any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices, to enforce compliance with this section or any regulation or order, or to require the divestiture of any acquisition in violation of this section, or for any combination of the foregoing, and such courts shall have jurisdiction of such actions. Upon a proper showing an injunction, decree, restraining order, order of divestiture, or other appropriate order shall be granted without bond.

"(5) CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS.—(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Director may, whenever the Director has reasonable cause to believe that the continuation by a savings and loan holding company of any activity or of ownership or control of any of its noninsured subsidiaries constitutes a serious risk to the financial safety, soundness, or stability of a savings and loan holding company's subsidiary savings association and is inconsistent with the sound operation of a savings association or with the purposes of this section or section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, order the savings and loan holding company or any of its subsidiaries, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to terminate such activities or to terminate (within 120 days or such longer period as the Director directs in unusual circumstances) its ownership or control of any such noninsured subsidiary either by sale or by distribution of the shares of the subsidiary to the shareholders of the savings and loan holding company. Such distribution shall be pro rata with respect to all of the shareholders of the distributing savings and loan holding company, and the holding company shall not make any charge to its shareholders arising out of such a distribution.

"(B) The Director may in the Director's discretion apply to the United States district court within the jurisdiction of which the principal office of the company is located, for the enforcement of any effective and outstanding order issued under this section, and such court shall have jurisdiction and power to order and require compliance therewith. Except as provided in subsection (j), no court shall have jurisdiction to affect by injunction or otherwise the issuance or enforcement of any notice or order under this section, or to review, modify, suspend, terminate, or set aside any such notice or order.

"(h) PROHIBITED ACTS.—It shall be unlawful for—

"(1) any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary thereof, or any director, officer, employee, or person owning, controlling, or holding with power to vote, or holding proxies representing, more than 25 percent of the voting shares, of such holding company or subsidiary, to hold, solicit, or exercise any proxies in respect of any voting rights in a savings association which is a mutual association;

"(2) any director or officer of a savings and loan holding company, or any individual who owns, controls, or holds with power to vote (or holds proxies representing) more than 25 percent of the voting shares of such holding company, to acquire control of any savings association not a subsidiary of such savings and loan holding company, unless such acquisition is approved by the Director pursuant to subsection (e)(4); or

"(3) any individual, except with the prior approval of the Director, to serve or act as a director, officer, or trustee of, or become a partner in, any savings and loan holding company after having been convicted of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or breach of trust.

"(i) PENALTIES.—

"(1) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—(A) Whoever knowingly violates any provision of this section, and any company which violates any regulation or order issued by the Director pursuant thereto, shall be fined not more than $100,000 per day for each day during which the violation continues.

"(B) Any individual who knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $100,000 per day for each day during which the violation continues, imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

"(C) Whoever knowingly violates any provision of this section with intent to deceive, to defraud, or to profit significantly shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which the violation continues, imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2) FALSE ENTRIES.—Every director, officer, partner, trustee, agent, or employee of a savings and loan holding company shall be subject to the same penalties for false entries in any book, report, or statement of such savings and loan holding company as are applicable to officers, agents, and employees of a savings association the accounts of which are insured by the Corporation for false entries in any books, reports, or statements of such association under section 1006 of title 18, United States Code.

"(3) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY.—

"(A) PENALTY.—Any company which violates, and any person who participates in a violation of, any provision of this section, or any regulation or order issued pursuant thereto, shall forfeit and pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such violation continues.

"(B) ASSESSMENT.—Any penalty imposed under subparagraph (A) may be assessed and collected by the Director in the manner provided in subparagraphs (E), (F), (G), and (I) of section 8(i)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act for penalties imposed (under such section) and any such assessment shall be subject to the provisions of such section.

"(C) HEARING.—The company or other person against whom any civil penalty is assessed under this paragraph shall be afforded a hearing if such company or person submits a request for such hearing within 20 days after the issuance of the notice of assessment. Section 8(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act shall apply to any proceeding under this paragraph.

"(D) DISBURSEMENT.—All penalties collected under authority of this paragraph shall be deposited into the Treasury.

"(E) VIOLATE DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'violate' includes any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.

"(F) REGULATIONS.—The Director shall prescribe regulations establishing such procedures as may be necessary to carry out this paragraph.

"(4) NOTICE UNDER THIS SECTION AFTER SEPARATION FROM SERVICE.—The resignation, termination of employment or participation, or separation of an institution-affiliated party (within the meaning of section 3(u) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) with respect to a savings and loan holding company or subsidiary thereof (including a separation caused by the deregistration of such a company or such a subsidiary) shall not affect the jurisdiction and authority of the Director to issue any notice and proceed under this section against any such party, if such notice is served before the end of the 6-year period beginning on the date such party ceased to be such a party with respect to such holding company or its subsidiary (whether such date occurs before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this paragraph).

"(j) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any party aggrieved by an order of the Director under this section may obtain a review of such order by filing in the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the principal office of such party is located, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, within 30 days after the date of service of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Director be modified, terminated, or set aside. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Director, and thereupon the Director shall file in the court the record in the proceeding, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition, such court shall have jurisdiction, which upon the filing of the record shall be exclusive, to affirm, modify, terminate, or set aside, in whole or in part, the order of the Director. Review of such proceedings shall be had as provided in chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"(k) SAVINGS CLAUSE.—Nothing contained in this section, other than any transaction approved under subsection (e)(2) of this section or section 13 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, shall be interpreted or construed as approving any act, action, or conduct which is or has been or may be in violation of existing law, nor shall anything herein contained constitute a defense to any action, suit, or proceeding pending or hereafter instituted on account of any act, action, or conduct in violation of the antitrust laws.

"(l) TREATMENT OF FDIC INSURED STATE SAVINGS BANKS AND COOPERATIVE BANKS AS SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a savings bank (as defined in section 3(g) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) and a cooperative bank that is an insured bank (as defined in section 3(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) upon application shall be deemed to be a savings association for the purpose of this section, if the Director determines that such bank is a qualified thrift lender (as determined under subsection (m)).

"(2) FAILURE TO MAINTAIN QUALIFIED THRIFT LENDER STATUS.—If any savings bank which is deemed to be a savings association under paragraph (1) subsequently fails to maintain its status as a qualified thrift lender, as determined by the Director, such bank may not thereafter be a qualified thrift lender for a period of 5 years.

"(m) QUALIFIED THRIFT LENDER TEST.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (6), any savings association shall have the status of a qualified thrift lender if—

"(A) the qualified thrift investments of such savings association equal or exceed 60 percent of the total tangible assets of such association; and

"(B) the qualified thrift investments of such savings association continue to equal or exceed 60 percent of the total tangible assets of such association on an average basis in 3 out of every 4 quarters and 2 out of every 3 years.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS GRANTED BY DIRECTOR.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the Director may grant such temporary and limited exceptions from the minimum actual thrift investment percentage requirement contained in such paragraph as the Director deems necessary if—

"(A) the Director determines that extraordinary circumstances exist, such as when the effects of high interest rates reduce mortgage demand to such a degree that an insufficient opportunity exists for a savings association to meet such investment requirements; or

"(B) the Director determines that—

"(i) the grant of any such exception will significantly facilitate an acquisition under section 13(c) or 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act;

"(ii) the acquired association will comply with the transition requirements of paragraph (6)(B), as if the date of the exemption were the starting date for the transition period described in that paragraph; and

"(iii) the Director determines that the exemption will not have an undue adverse effect on competing savings associations in the relevant market and will further the purposes of this subsection.

"(3) FAILURE TO BECOME AND REMAIN A QUALIFIED THRIFT LENDER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (D), a savings association that fails to become or remain a qualified thrift lender shall either become one or more banks (other than a savings bank), or be subject to subparagraph (B).

"(B) RESTRICTIONS APPLICABLE TO SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS THAT ARE NOT QUALIFIED THRIFT LENDERS.—

"(i) RESTRICTIONS EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY.—The following restrictions shall apply immediately to a savings association after the date on which the savings association should have become or ceases to be a qualified thrift lender:

"(I) ACTIVITIES.—The savings association shall not make any new investment (including an investment in a subsidiary) or engage, directly or indirectly, in any other new activity unless that investment or activity would be permissible for the savings association if it were a national bank, and is also permissible for the savings association as a savings association.

"(II) BRANCHING.—The savings association shall not establish any new branch office at any location at which a national bank located in the savings association's home State may not establish a branch office. For purposes of this subclause, a savings association's home State is the State in which the savings association's total deposits were largest on the date on which the savings association should have become or ceased to be a qualified thrift lender.

"(III) ADVANCES.—The savings association shall not be eligible to obtain new advances from any Federal home loan bank.

"(IV) DIVIDENDS.—The savings association shall be subject to all statutes and regulations governing the payment of dividends by a national bank in the same manner and to the same extent as if the savings association were a national bank.

"(ii) ADDITIONAL RESTRICTIONS EFFECTIVE AFTER THREE YEARS.—The following additional restrictions shall apply to a savings association beginning 3 years after the date on which the savings association should have become or ceases to be a qualified thrift lender:

"(I) ACTIVITIES.—The savings association shall not retain any investment (including an investment in any subsidiary) or engage, directly or indirectly, in any activity unless that investment or activity would be permissible for the savings association if it were a national bank, and is also permissible for the savings association as a savings association.

"(II) ADVANCES.—The savings association shall repay any outstanding advances from any Federal home loan bank as promptly as can be prudently done consistent with the safe and sound operation of the savings association.

"(C) HOLDING COMPANY REGULATION.—Any company that controls a savings association that is subject to any provision of subparagraph (B) shall, within one year after the date on which the savings association should have become or ceases to be a qualified thrift lender, register as and be deemed to be a bank holding company subject to all of the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, and other statutes applicable to bank holding companies, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the company were a bank holding company and the savings association were a bank, as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

"(D) REQUALIFICATION.—A savings association that should have become or ceases to be a qualified thrift lender shall not be subject to subparagraph (B) or (C) if the savings association becomes a qualified thrift lender by meeting the qualified thrift lender requirement in paragraph (1) on an average basis in 3 out of every 4 quarters and 2 out of every 3 years and thereafter remains a qualified thrift lender. If the savings association (or any savings association that acquired all or substantially all of its assets from that savings association) at any time thereafter ceases to be a qualified thrift lender, it shall immediately be subject to all provisions of subparagraphs (B) and (C) as if all the periods described in subparagraphs (B)(ii) and (C) had expired.

"(E) DEPOSIT INSURANCE ASSESSMENTS.—Any bank chartered as a result of the requirements of this section shall be obligated until December 31, 1993, to pay to the Savings Association Insurance Fund the assessments assessed on savings associations under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Such association shall also be assessed, on the date of its change of status from a Savings Association Insurance Fund member, the exit fee and entrance fee provided in section 5(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Such institution shall not be obligated to pay the assessments assessed on banks under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act until—

"(i) December 31, 1993, or

"(ii) the institution's change of status from a Savings Association Insurance fund member to a Bank Insurance Fund member, whichever is later.

"(F) SPECIAL RULE.—This paragraph shall not apply to savings associations headquartered and operating primarily in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands.

"(G) NO CIRCUMVENTION OF EXIT MORATORIUM.—Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not be construed as permitting any insured depository institution to engage in any conversion transaction prohibited under section 5(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(H) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This paragraph shall take effect upon the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989.

"(4) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) ACTUAL THRIFT INVESTMENT PERCENTAGE.—The term 'actual thrift investment percentage' means the percentage determined by dividing—

"(i) the amount of the qualified thrift investments of a savings association, by

"(ii) the total amount of tangible assets of such savings association.

"(B) QUALIFIED THRIFT INVESTMENTS.—The term 'qualified thrift investments' means, with respect to any savings association, the sum of—

"(i) the aggregate amount of loans, equity positions, or securities held by the savings association (or any subsidiary of such association) which are related to domestic residential real estate or manufactured housing;

"(ii) the value of property used by such association or subsidiary in the conduct of the business of such association or subsidiary;

"(iii) subject to paragraph (5), the liquid assets of the type required to be maintained under this Act; and

"(iv) subject to paragraph (5), 50 percent of the dollar amount of the residential mortgage loans originated by such savings association or subsidiary and sold within 90 days of origination.

"(5) LIMITATION ON TREATMENT OF CERTAIN ASSETS AS THRIFT INVESTMENTS.—The aggregate amount of the assets described in clauses (iii) and (iv) of paragraph (4)(B) which may be taken into account in determining the amount of the qualified thrift investments of any savings association shall not exceed the amount which is equal to 10 percent of the tangible assets of such association.

"(6) TRANSITIONAL RULE FOR CERTAIN SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If any Federal savings association in existence as a Federal savings association on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989—

"(i) that was chartered as a savings bank or a cooperative bank under State law before October 15, 1982; or

"(ii) that acquired its principal assets from an association that was chartered before October 15, 1982, as a savings bank or a cooperative bank under State law, meets the requirements of subparagraph (B), such savings association shall be treated as a qualified thrift lender during the 6-year period beginning on August 10, 1989.

"(B) SUBPARAGRAPH (B) REQUIREMENTS.—A savings association meets the requirements of this subparagraph if, in the determination of the Director—

"(i) the actual thrift investment percentage of such association does not, after the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, decrease below the actual thrift investment percentage of such association on July 15, 1989; and

"(ii) the amount by which—

"(I) the actual thrift investment percentage of such association at the end of each period described in the following table, exceeds

"(II) the actual thrift investment percentage of such association on July 15, 1989,

"(i) the grant of any such exception will significantly facilitate an acquisition under section 13(c) or 13(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act;

"(ii) the acquired association will comply with the transition requirements of paragraph (7)(B), as if the date of the exemption were the starting date for the transition period described in that paragraph; and

"(3) FAILURE TO BECOME AND REMAIN A QUALIFIED THRIFT LENDER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A savings association that fails to become or remain a qualified thrift lender shall either become one or more banks (other than a savings bank) or be subject to subparagraph (B), except as provided in subparagraph (D).

"(D) REQUALIFICATION.—A savings association that should have become or ceases to be a qualified thrift lender shall not be subject to subparagraph (B) or (C) if the savings association becomes a qualified thrift lender by meeting the qualified thrift lender requirement in paragraph (1) for the preceding 2-year period and remains a qualified thrift lender. If the savings association (or any savings association that acquired all or substantially all of its assets from that savings association) at any time thereafter ceases to be a qualified thrift lender, it shall immediately be subject to all provisions of subparagraphs (B) and (C) as if all the periods described in subparagraphs (B)(ii) and (C) had expired.

Nothing in this paragraph limits the right of the Corporation or the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision to enforce a contractual provision which authorizes the Corporation or the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, as a successor to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, to require a savings association to write down or amortize goodwill at a faster rate than otherwise required under this Act or under applicable accounting standards.

"(C) EFFECTIVE PERIOD OF TEMPORARY ORDER.—Any order issued under subparagraph (A) shall become effective not earlier than 10 days from the date of service upon the institution and, unless set aside, limited, or suspended by a court in proceedings authorized hereunder, such temporary order shall remain effective and enforceable until an order of the Board under paragraph (3) becomes final or until the Corporation dismisses the proceedings under paragraph (3).

(i) such deposit consists of additions made by automatic deposit the depositor was unable to prevent; or

(ii) such depositor did not have actual knowledge of the suspension of insurance.

"(9) FINAL DECISIONS TO TERMINATE INSURANCE.—Any decision by the Board of Directors to—

(B) the aggregate amount of Federal financial assistance provided with respect to such transactions; and

(C) any tax benefits available by reason of such transactions; and

(2) the aggregate amount of Federal financial assistance provided during such year, and the aggregate tax benefits utilized during such year, which are attributable to such transactions in prior years.

SEC. 1404. STUDIES OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PUBLIC DEBT AND ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to better manage the bonded indebtedness of the United States, the Secretary shall conduct 2 annual studies to assess the financial safety and soundness of the activities of all Government-sponsored enterprises and the impact of their operations on Federal borrowing.

(b) ACCESS TO RELEVANT INFORMATION.—

(ii) he discloses the material in any manner other than—

(I) to an officer or employee of the Department of the Treasury; or

(II) pursuant to the exceptions set forth in such section 1906.

(c) ASSESSMENT OF RISK.—In assessing the financial safety and soundness of the activities of Government-sponsored enterprises, and the impact of their activities on Federal borrowing, the Secretary shall quantify the risks associated with each Government-sponsored enterprise. In quantifying such risks, the Secretary shall determine the volume and type of securities outstanding which are issued or guaranteed by each Government-sponsored enterprise, the capitalization of each Government-sponsored enterprise, and the degree of risk involved in the operations of each Government-sponsored enterprise due to factors such as credit risk, interest rate risk, management and operations risk, and business risk. The Secretary shall also report on the quality and timeliness of information currently available to the public and the Federal Government concerning the extent and nature of the activities of Government-sponsored enterprises and the financial risk associated with such activities.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1278) to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

TITLE I. PURPOSES

The primary purposes of the bill are: (1) to promote, through regulatory reform, a safe and stable system of affordable housing finance; (2) to improve the supervision of savings associations by strengthening capital, accounting, and other supervisory standards; (3) to curtail investments and other activities of savings associations that pose unacceptable risks to the Federal deposit insurance funds; (4) to promote the independence of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation through an independent board of directors, adequate funding, and appropriate powers; (5) to put the Federal deposit insurance funds on a sound financial footing for the future; (6) to establish an Office of Thrift Supervision in the Department of the Treasury, under the general oversight of the Secretary of the Treasury; (7) to create a new corporation, to be known as the Resolution Trust Corporation, to deal with failed thrift institutions; (8) to provide funds from public and private sources to deal expeditiously with failed financial institutions; (9) to strengthen the enforcement powers of federal regulators of financial institutions; and (10) to strengthen the penalties for defrauding or otherwise damaging financial institutions and their depository.

TITLE II. FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

FDIC AS INSURER BUT NOT PRIMARY REGULATOR OF THRIFTS

Title II gives the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ("FDIC") the duty of insuring the deposits of savings associations as well as banks but does not make the FDIC the primary Federal regulator of savings associations of any type. "Savings association" and "bank" are mutually exclusive terms. The term "Depository institution" includes both savings associations and banks. "Savings association" includes federally chartered savings associations and savings banks as well as State chartered savings association.

CHANGE IN COMPOSITION OF FDIC'S BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Conference Report changes the composition of the FDIC's board of directors from its present number of 3, including the Comptroller of the Currency, to a board of 5, including the Comptroller as well as the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision. As of March 1, 1993, no more than 3 members of the board may be affiliated with the same political party. The 3 members of the board appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate have 6-year terms, the Chairperson a term of 5 years as Chairperson.

VOTE REQUIRED TO DENY INSURANCE TO FEDERAL SAVINGS ASSOCIATION

Title II requires the FDIC's board to act by a vote of ¾ths of its members (excluding the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision) in order to deny deposit insurance to a Federal savings association whose charter application has been approved by the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision.

CONVERSIONS FROM MEMBERSHIP IN ONE INSURANCE FUND TO ANOTHER

The Conference Report requires that the FDIC approve any transaction in which an insured depository institution ceases to be a member of the Bank Insurance Fund (BIF) or the Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF) and becomes a member of the other fund. Generally, any savings association other than a Federal savings bank chartered under section 5(o) of the Home Owners' Loan Act is a member of the SAIF, and any bank is a member of the BIF. During the 5 years following enactment of the Act, conversions are prohibited with certain exceptions. The FDIC may approve one or more conversion transactions, if during the 5-year moratorium period the aggregate amount of deposits transferred from insurance by SAIF to insurance by BIF (or vice versa) does not exceed 35 percent of the lesser of (i) the sum of an insured depository institution's total deposits as of May 1, 1989, plus net interest credited to the date or dates of transfer or (ii) the total deposits of the institution on the date or dates of transfer.

During the conversion moratorium the FDIC also may approve a conversion as part of an acquisition of a depository institution in default or in danger of default if the estimated benefits to the fund the institution is leaving (or the RTC, if the institution is a savings association) equal or exceed the estimated lost assessment income to that fund during the years remaining in the moratorium period.

In the event of any conversion transaction the institution involved must pay an exit fee to the fund it is leaving and an entrance fee to the fund it is entering. During the 7-year period following date of enactment of the Act the Secretary of the Treasury and the FDIC jointly determine the exit fee payable for leaving SAIF.

The conversion provisions permit a savings association to switch to a bank charter so long as it remains a SAIF member during the 5-year moratorium.

The Conferees do not intend for this provision to apply to any institution that has never accepted deposits, and thus has never been insured by either fund.

CROSS-GUARANTEES BY COMMONLY CONTROLLED INSTITUTIONS

The Conference Report establishes liability to the FDIC for the loss or anticipated loss to the FDIC that arises from the default of a commonly controlled insured depository institution or assistance provided to such an institution in danger of default. Institutions are commonly controlled if they have the same holding company or one institution is controlled by another. The FDIC may waive collection on this liability.

The FDIC also may provide exemptions from liability for prospective losses if it determines that such exemption is in the best interests of the SAIF or BIF or both. If it grants such an exemption, the institution or institutions exempted must comply with the affiliated transactions restrictions of sections 23A and 23B of the Federal Reserve Act without regard to the 'sister bank' exemption for as long as FDIC's grant of exemption extends.

The "cross-guarantee" provisions during the 5-year period following date of enactment of the Act also exempt SAIF (or BIF) members from losses attributable to BIF (or SAIF) members acquired by the SAIF (or BIF) member prior to enactment of the Act. The provisions also exclude from liability a depository institution that acquires control of another depository institution through foreclosure of a pledge of stock granted to secure a debt incurred in good faith. The same restrictions on affiliated party transactions apply as in the case of the discretionary grant of exemption described above. Furthermore, an institution is not liable for any loss solely attributable to an affiliate if such affiliate was receiving assistance from the FSLIC and the FSLIC's successor is unable to make such payments and the affiliate's default is solely caused by the failure to make such payments.

FDIC's claim for loss reimbursement under the cross-guarantee is superior to any claim of shareholders of the institution liable or any claim of affiliates of such institution (other than claims on secured debt that existed as of May 1, 1989). FDIC's claim is subordinate to the claims against the depository institution of depositors, general and third party secured creditors, and holders of subordinated debt other than affiliates.

ASSESSMENTS FOR DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Assessment rates for the BIF and the SAIF will be set independently. BIF rates are scheduled to increase from the current 0.083 percent to 0.12 percent in 1990 and to 0.15 percent in 1991. SAIF rates are scheduled to increase from the current 0.208 percent to 0.23 percent in 1991 and recede to 0.18 percent in 1994 and 0.15 in 1998.

The FDIC may increase rates from the scheduled levels for either fund if necessary to restore the fund's ratio of reserves to insured deposits to its target level within a reasonable period of time. The assessment rates for SAIF may not be increased before 1995; those for BIF may not be increased before 1995 unless the reserve ratio falls or the fund has earlier reached its designated reserve ratio. The maximum assessment rate is 0.325 percent, and the maximum year-to-year increase is 0.075 percent.

The designated reserve ratios of the funds will be set independently on an annual basis at 1.25 percent or higher, up to 1.50 percent, if the FDIC Board determines on a year-by-year basis that significant risk of substantial future losses justifies a higher ratio. However, the designated reserve ratio may not exceed 1.50 percent. The conferees chose the Senate requirements of a "significant risk" rather than the House of Representatives' "probable risk" to clarify that losses large enough to justify greater protection need not be judged more likely than not.

There are several provisions designed to prevent the funds from becoming unnecessarily large. Any assets of a fund in excess of 1.25 percent of insured deposits will be treated as a supplemental reserve. Earnings from the supplemental reserve will be distributed to members, as will the supplemental reserve itself if it becomes no longer needed. Assessment income in excess of amounts necessary to maintain the designated reserve ratio will be rebated.

Consistent with current law, a SAIF member may use its share of the FSLIC's secondary reserve to offset insurance premiums.

CHANGE IN CONTROL OF INSURED DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS

The Change in Bank Control Act is amended to apply to changes in control of savings associations as well as banks. Title III of the Act repeals the Change in Savings and Loan Control Act. The Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision is the appropriate Federal banking agency for purposes of approving any change in control of a savings association or holding company that controls a savings association.

CONSERVATORSHIP AND RECEIVERSHIP POWERS OF THE FDIC

The FDIC is authorized to act as a conservator or receiver for insured banks and insured savings associations that are chartered under Federal or State law. The title also distinguishes between the powers of a conservator and receiver, making clear that a conservator operates or disposes of an institution as a going concern while a receiver has the power to liquidate and wind up the affairs of an institution.

Title II permits the appointment of the FDIC as conservator for an insured depository institution chartered under Federal or State law. It requires the appointment of the FDIC as receiver for such an institution chartered under Federal law. It permits the appointment of the FDIC as receiver of State chartered institutions pursuant to State law, and requires the appointment of FDIC as receiver for State chartered institutions pursuant to Federal law. The title also empowers the FDIC to appoint itself as sole conservator or receiver for a State chartered insured institution if the appropriate State regulatory agency has acted first to take custody of such institution and either closed the institution or taken custody for 15 days during such period and depositors are unable to withdraw funds.

Title II establishes the manner of conduct of a conservatorship or receivership of an insured depository institution under Federal law. The FDIC is granted rulemaking authority with respect to this subject. The title sets forth in detail the claims procedures that apply with respect to claims against institutions in liquidation. These procedures allow a claimant, after an initial agency determination, the choice of pursuit of judicial adjudication or with the consent of the agency, administrative review.

Title II grants the FDIC as conservator or receiver certain rights and powers of a receiver in equity, including the right to repudiate contracts that the conservator or receiver determines are burdensome and the repudiation of which will promote the orderly administration of the affairs of the institution in conservatorship or receivership. In detailing the repudiation power Title II provides for repudiation of real property leases. The disaffirmance of burdensome leases should take into account the total circumstances of the lease, including whether, in the case of a sale and lease back, the lease was executed as part of an arms-length transaction. Title II also provides specifically for financial instruments contracts (defined as "qualified financial contracts").

It is expressly intended that should the FDIC determine that a transfer of servicing rights relating to mortgages owned by or backing the securities of Government National Mortgage Association, Federal National Mortgage Association and/or Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation is appropriate for the conservator, receiver, or FDIC in some other capacity, GNMA, FNMA, FHLMC and FDIC will work together to accomplish such a transfer so that the guarantee agreements, servicing contracts, rules, and program requirements governing such mortgages or securities are binding upon the transferee. Nothing in this Act impairs GNMA's rights under Section 306(g) of the National Housing Act.

Title II also establishes administrative procedures for the determination of claims of insurance deposit coverage and judicial review of administrative determinations.

Current law is clarified with respect to FDIC's liability in the event it elects to arrange an assisted acquisition or transfer of assets and liabilities to a bridge bank in order to preserve or attempt to preserve the going concern value of an institution. In such event the FDIC as receiver or in any other capacity is liable to a claimant only for the amount that the claimant would realize from the liquidation and winding up of the affairs of the institution and the payment of insured depositors.

Title II substantially amends the FDIC's current authority to organize bridge banks as a means of preserving the going concern value of an institution pending a solicitation of offers for or other disposition of the institution. The amendments clarify the circumstances in which the status of a bridge bank ends and distinguish between the status of a bridge bank and its corporate existence as a national bank.

Title II preempts State law with respect to claims brought by the FDIC in any capcity against officers or directors of an insured depository institution. The preemption allows the FDIC to pursue claims for gross negligence or any conduct that demonstrates a greater disregard of a duty of care, including intentional tortious conduct.

FDIC'S ASSISTANCE AND DEFAULT PREVENTION AUTHORITY

The FDIC is empowered to provide financial assistance to prevent the default or failure of insured savings associations as well as insured banks. Assistance payments must be made from SAIF is they are made to or for the benefit of an insured savings association.

Title II grants to the FDIC authority similar to FSLIC's emergency authority to arrange acquisitions of failing thrifts. The amendments curtail severely the extent to which other Federal law may be waived in such acquisitions. The amendments also remove the procedures under current law that give priority to in-State thrift acquirers of failing thrifts. The acquisition of failing thrifts by banks or bank holding companies is uninsured. A thrift subsidiary of a bank or bank holding company may branch in the same manner as a savings association (not affiliated with a bank holding company) that has its home office in the same state as the home office of such thrift subsidiary. Finally, emergency acquisition authority is amended to grant to the FDIC discretion to provide assistance to certain savings associations located in economically depressed regions.

FUNDING FOR THE SAIF

The SAIF will receive funds, as needed, for administrative and supervisory expenses from the FSLIC Resolution Fund through fiscal year 1991. It is not anticipated that these will amount to more than $150 million. Starting in 1992, the SAIF will receive assessments paid by its members, less amounts needed for interest on FICO bonds. The Treasury will ensure that the SAIF receives at least $2 billion per year from assessments through 1999 by making up any shortfall from Treasury funds.

In addition, the Treasury will provide any funds necessary to ensure that a schedule of steadily increasing minimum net worth levels is met by the fund from 1991 through 1999. For this purpose the Treasury may spend as much as $2 billion in 1991 and in 1992. For the full 9-year period, Treasury may spend up to $16 billion.

FDIC BORROWING

The SAIF may borrow from the Federal home loan banks, with the approval of the Federal Housing Finance Board, and the FDIC may borrow from the Treasury on behalf of either the SAIF or the BIF with the approval of the Secretary. Combined Treasury borrowing by FDIC funds is limited to $5 billion.

The FDIC may also issue other obligations as needed. All borrowings must be attributed to the BIF or the SAIF and total borrowing by either fund is limited by a requirement that no obligation can be issued if its issuance would leave the net worth of that fund equal to less than 10 percent of assets.

In meeting this test, assets held as a result of case resolution activities must be measured at estimated market value less expected management and disposition costs. Guarantees and other obligations must be measured at their estimated cost. Estimates must be adjusted at least quarterly, and transactions subsequent to the most recent audit must be taken into account.

All obligations issued by the BIF or the SAIF subsequent to the date of enactment of this Act that have a stated principal amount and a stated maturity date will be backed by the full faith and credit of the United States.

FSLIC RESOLUTION FUND

The FSLIC Resolution Fund will be managed by the FDIC as a separate fund. It will assume all the assets and liabilities of the FSLIC except for those expressly transferred or assumed by the Resolution Trust Corporation.

To meet its obligations, this Fund may use its assets, returns from receiverships, amounts borrowed by FICO, and insurance assessments on SAIF members through 1991 that are not required for interest on FICO bonds and not required by REFCORP for defeasance of its bonds. Any additional funds needed will be provided by the Treasury. The Fund will terminate when its debts are paid and its assets are sold.

REPORTS BY FDIC

The FDIC is required to submit annual reports to the Congress and certain quarterly financial forecasts and results of the operations to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

The FDIC currently provides financial information reports to the Office of Management and Budget and the Corporation will continue to provide such reports. The obligation to provide such reports, however, does not imply any jurisdiction or oversight by OMB over the affairs or operations of the FDIC and, similarly does not affect or alter in any way the FDIC's existing exemption from the apportionment or sequestration provisions of federal budget laws, nor does it affect the FDIC's exemption from the provisions of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950 and the Anti-deficiency Act. Further, OMB's lack of jurisdiction or oversight does not preclude the current practice under which the Director of the Office of Management and Budget may request information necessary to carry out OMB's budget and financial responsibilities for the overall Federal Government.

The Title also requires the FDIC to submit certain special reports, including one on risk-based premiums. The FDIC is authorized to study the imposition of risk based premiums but may not establish such premiums without specific Congressional authorization.

INSURANCE LOGO

Title II establishes the forms of logo that insured banks and insured savings associations may display. Each type of institution may represent that insured deposits are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States Government.

The Conferees recommend that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the National Credit Union Administration adopt appropriate rules designed to discourage advertising by an insured depository institution which disparages the condition of any Federal deposit insurance fund. The Conferees further recommend that any such rules discourage advertisements that refer to the length of time that an institution has been a member of a fund or that it was formerly a member of another fund.

BANK MERGER ACT

The Bank Merger Act is amended by apply to merger transactions involving insured savings associations as well as insured banks. The Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision is the appropriate Federal regulator with jurisdiction to approve a merger in which the surviving entity is a savings association.

THRIFT POWERS

Title II makes major revisions in the powers of thrift institutions. The heart of these revisions is in a new section 28 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, which has four key provisions: (1) a general rule relating to State-authorized activities that are not permissible for a Federal savings association; (2) a modified version of that rule applicable when the only difference between State and Federal powers is that a State savings association may engage in a greater amount of a given activity than can a Federal savings association; (3) a prohibition against equity investments that are not permissible for a Federal savings association; and (4) a prohibition against investing in corporate debt securities not of investment grade (commonly known as "junk bonds").

General Rule

Subsection (a) prohibits a State savings association from engaging as principal, after January 1, 1990, in any type of activity that is not permissible for a Federal savings association unless both parts of the following two-part test are satisfied: (1) the FDIC has determined that the activity in question would pose no significant risk of loss to the deposit insurance fund of which the savings association is a member; and (2) the savings association has enough capital to meet the fully phased-in capital standards prescribed under section 5(t) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (section 301 of the bill). The test of a "significant risk" of loss to the deposit insurance fund is not the relative or absolute size of the potential loss, but whether there is significant risk that the insurance fund will suffer a loss if a State savings association engages in the activity. The "fully phased-in capital standards" are those that will apply after all phase-in periods relating to capital have expired.

Subsection (a) does not apply to activities that a savings association engages in only as its customer's agent. Such activities could, however, be restricted under other provisions of law, such as those authorizing the FDIC to prohibit any activity found to pose a serious threat of loss to the deposit insurance fund.

Differences of Magnitude

Subsection (b) applies when an activity is permissible for a Federal savings association and a State savings association seeks to engage in that activity in an amount greater than that permissible for a Federal savings association. Under subsection (b), the State savings association may engage in that higher amount of the activity so long as both parts of the following two-part test are satisfied: (1) the FDIC has not determined that engaging in that higher amount of the activity would pose any significant risk of loss to the deposit insurance fund; and (2) the savings association has enough capital to meet the fully phased-in capital standards prescribed under section 5(t) of the Home Owners' Loan Act.

Subsection (b) does not apply to nonresidential real-estate loans, which are governed by subsection (a).

Prohibition Against Equity Investments

Effective as soon as the bill becomes law, subsection (c) prohibits a State savings association from acquiring or retaining any equity investment of a type or in an amount that is not permissible for a Federal savings association to acquire and retain directly. The prohibition applies to equity investments in real estate, investments in equity securities, and any other equity investment. In applying subsection (c), Federal regulators should look to the substance of the investment and not merely to the form. Any transaction that is in substance an equity investment may be covered by subsection (c), even if the transaction is nominally a loan or other permissible transaction.

There is a limited exception for shares of service corporations. Such shares must, however, meet a two-part test similar to that in subsection (a) if either (1) the aggregate amount of the savings association's investment in service corporations exceeds that permissible for a Federal savings association; or (2) the service corporation engages in any activity that is not permissible for a service corporation of a Federal savings association. By the same token, subsection (c) does not restrict investments in service corporations that are permissible for a Federal savings association.

A State savings association must divest itself of any equity investment that is not permissible either (1) for a Federal savings association directly or (2) under the exception for shares of service corporations. Any such investment must be divested as quickly as can be prudently done, as determined by the FDIC, and in any event not later than July 1, 1994. No such investment may be acquired after the bill becomes law.

Corporate Debt Securities That Are Not of Investment Grade

Subsection (d) prohibits a savings association or its subsidiaries from acquiring or retaining any corporate debt security that, at the time of acquisition, is not rated in one of the four highest rating categories by at least one nationally recognized statistical rating organization. A transition rule provides that any such security held when the bill becomes law must be divested as quickly as can be prudently done (as determined by the FDIC) consistent with safety and soundness and in light of relevant market conditions, and in any event not later than July 1, 1994. No such securities may be acquired after the bill becomes law, other than by an affiliate (or in the case of a mutual savings association, a separately capitalized subsidiary). Affiliates must by definition be separately capitalized, and appropriate firewall protections will apply under other provisions of law, such as Section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act. The Conferees do not intend that securities subject to divestment under subsection (d) be treated, for regulatory accounting purposes, as securities "held for sale."

LOAN TO VALUE RATIOS

Although the Conferees deleted from statutory language the loan to value requirements enacted by the Senate, the appropriate Federal banking agencies are to ensure that general limits or loan to value ratios, for both banks and thrifts are implemented. The appropriate Federal banking agencies shall consider specifically the standards in the Senate bill for loans secured by residential property, loans secured by developed commercial real estate and loans secured by raw land and implement such standards as are consistent with safe and sound business practices.

BROKERED DEPOSITS

Any insured financial institution which does not meet the minimum capital requirements applicable with respect to such institutions and is thus a "troubled" institution may not accept funds obtained directly or indirectly by or through any deposit broker for deposit into one or more accounts. A troubled institution is also prohibited from soliciting deposits by offering rates of interest which are significantly higher than the prevailing rates of interest on deposits offered by other insured financial institutions of the same type, i.e., banks or thrifts, in such financial institution's normal market area. This latter provision prohibits the solicitation of deposits by in-house salaried employees through so-called money desk operations.

The FDIC is also explicitly authorized to impose by regulation or rule additional restrictions on the acceptance of brokered deposits by troubled institutions. Explicitly providing such authority to the FDIC with regard to troubled institutions is not meant to imply that the Corporation does not already have the authority to regulate the use of brokered deposits by fully capitalized and under capitalized institutions.

The provision authorizes the FDIC to waive the prohibition on the acceptance of brokered deposits by troubled institutions, but only after a case-by-case review of applications made by such institutions and then only upon a finding that the acceptance of brokered deposits by a given institution does not constitute an unsafe or unsound practice.

The conferees understand that there are situations where brokered deposits are useful and needed particularly for liquidity purposes. Although the provision requires a case-by-case application by a troubled institution for waiver of the prohibition, the Corporation may indicate by rulemaking the type or types of situations in which the Corporation would consider granting a waiver consistent with the statute. The prohibition, however, could only be waived by a finding that the use of brokered deposits by a particular troubled institution does not constitute an unsafe or unsound practice for it.

Conferees intend that the prohibition imposed by this section should not become effective for 120 days in order to conform it with the effective date of the new capital standard for thrift institutions established by section 314 of the bill. During the 120 day phase in period the FDIC should insure that all currently under-capitalized institutions, or any thrift institutions that will be under-capitalized under the new standard, do not increase their overall holdings of brokered deposits.

CONTRACTS FOR GOODS, PRODUCTS AND SERVICES

Section 225 adds a new section to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDIA) which prohibits an insured depository institution from entering into a written or oral contract with any person to provide goods, products, or services to or for the benefit of such financial institution which would jeopardize the safety or soundness of the institution. Under subsection (b), the FDIC is directed to issue regulations and orders necessary to implement the section and to prevent evasion of its provisions. The provision is enforceable against all institution affiliated parties under section 8 of the FDIA. Corrective actions, which may be ordered for violations of this provision, are found in that section. These may include orders to cease and desist (which may require the recision of agreements or contracts or the disposal of any assets) or civil money penalties.

Subsection (e) directs the Attorney General and the Comptroller General to jointly initiate a study and report to Congress on the extent to which insured institutions have entered into contracts with vendors under which vendors agree to purchase the stock or assets of, or invest capital or make deposits in, such institutions. The study and report must also address the extent to which such practices may be anti-competitive and should be prohibited. The report is to be submitted one year from the date of enactment.

TITLE III—SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS

DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE OF THRIFT SUPERVISION

This Title abolishes the Federal Home Loan Bank Board ("Bank Board") and the position of the Chairman of the Bank Board as the chief regulator of the savings and loan industry. The Office of Thrift Supervision is established as an office in the Department of the Treasury subject to the general oversight of the Secretary of the Treasury. However, the Secretary of the Treasury may not intervene in any matter or proceeding before the Director unless otherwise provided by law. The Director is responsible for the examination and supervision of all savings and loans and will have all the powers which were vested in the Federal Home Loan Bank Board or the Chairman of such Board on the day before the date of enactment. The Director shall be appointed by the President for a five year term with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director is prohibited from maintaining a direct or indirect financial interest in any insured depository institution.

CAPITAL STANDARDS

The Conferees recognize that strong capital standards are essential to protect the safety of our deposit insurance system. Capital represents the investment made by owners of a savings association in that association. Without sufficient capital, the owners have little incentive to limit the risks taken with depositors' funds. Therefore, an adequate capital requirement will provide the self-restraint necessary to limit risk-taking by Federally insured savings associations.

Capital also protects the deposit insurance fund by providing a cushion against losses if the institution's condition deteriorates. Even the most prudently managed savings association may experience losses, such as through changes in interest rates, a downturn in the local economy, or unfortunate investment decisions. An institution with adequate capital should be able to absorb such losses.

In order to provide a benchmark below which the thrift regulator generally cannot fall, the legislation requires that the capital standards prescribed by the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision (Director) be no less stringent than the capital standards applicable for national banks. Thus, for example, the Director is required under this Act to establish risk-based capital standards that are no less stringent than those applicable to national banks. Also, savings institutions are required to maintain a leverage limit (ratio) of not less than 3% core capital to assets, and a minimum level of tangible capital equal to 1.5% of assets.

Savings associations are required to meet the leverage limit upon the effective date of the capital standards. Savings associations currently including supervisory goodwill in capital are permitted to continue to include supervisory goodwill in capital, with the approval of the Director, but are required to progressively phase-out supervisory goodwill from capital (in accordance with the schedule contained in the report) by January 1, 1995, at which time all savings associations must satisfy the leverage limit without including any supervisory goodwill.

Both banking and thrift institution regulators have devoted considerable effort to the initial development of risk-based capital standards. These efforts have demonstrated that the initial standards will evolve and be refined over time as the regulators and the regulated institutions gain experience with the appropriate standards applicable to the various investments made by depository institutions.

The legislation requires that the capital standards prescribed by the Director be no less stringent than the capital standards applicable to national banks. This requirement refers not only to the numerical capital-to-asset ratios applicable to national banks, but also to the qualitative factors used by the Comptroller. For example, the Comptroller permits the value attributed to core deposits to be included in calculating core capital, but only if the rights meet certain criteria (e.g., relating to an identifiable stream of cash flows and being separable and marketable). The Director's standards for savings associations should be no less stringent. Likewise, to the extent percentage restrictions apply to including such assets in calculating the capital of a national bank, restrictions at least as stringent must be applied to savings associations. The Director retains the discretion to determine the extent to which, if any, these assets may be counted toward the capital requirements.

Under the OCC's current regulations, such intangible assets may be used for capital purposes so long as such assets are separately identifiable, saleable and marketable, and of an established value. This legislation is not intended to limit the Director's authority to establish the same type of criteria for the computation of the leverage and risk-based requirements established under this legislation.

Where supervisory transactions were approved by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board prior to the enactment of H.R. 1278, and the Bank Board had authorized certain contributed assets, such as land, to be valued at market value for regulatory capital purposes; the Director may, at his discretion, continue to treat those assets as capital to the same extent previously authorized, if such treatment would be no less stringent than the treatment OCC provides for national banks. The Director would be expected to review the appraisals of these contributed assets and determine whether these assets should be included in determining the value of capital.

MORTGAGE SERVICING RIGHTS

In calculating core capital for the purpose of the leverage limit, the 1.5% tangible capital requirement and risk-based standards, a savings association shall treat purchased mortgage servicing rights in a manner no less stringent than they are treated at such time under regulations prescribed by the Corporation with respect to insured State nonmember banks and on terms no less stringent than those imposed under the capital standards prescribed by the Corporation for State nonmember banks. The Corporation has full discretion over the percentage of capital that may be composed of purchased mortgage servicing rights.

The standards prescribed may permit a savings association to include in capital, on terms no less stringent than those prescribed by the Corporation for State nonmember banks, 90 percent of the fair market value of readily marketable purchased mortgage servicing rights. The fair market value of purchased mortgage servicing rights shall be determined not less often than quarterly and qualifying purchased mortgage servicing rights shall meet OCC qualitative standards for marketability, valuation, and separability, but not be limited to OCC quantitative standards for tangible capital.

DATE OF ENACTMENT

The 1.5% tangible capital requirement and the leverage limit go into effect not more than 120 days following the enactment of this Act. Until the capital standards required in this Act become effective, the capital regulations promulgated by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board remain in effect. In defining core capital and prescribing the risk-based capital requirement, the Director is to follow the Comptroller's final regulations for national banks, even if those regulations have not yet taken effect.

In developing the regulations on capital standards, the Director shall consider and shall include a description of the procedure for institutions not in compliance with capital standards to receive timely consideration of applications for an exemption from sanctions resulting from non-compliance with such standards. This description shall include information on required forms, prioritization of applications and other guidelines designed to expedite the application process.

An institution not in compliance with capital standards upon promulgation of applicable regulations may be subject to restrictions on asset growth, at the regulator's discretion. Also, within 60 days of the promulgation of the capital standards regulations, or the date in which the institution falls out of compliance with such standards, whichever is later, an institution not in compliance with capital standards must submit an acceptable business plan to the Director outlining how the institution plans to work towards compliance with capital standards.

TEMPORARY EXEMPTION

Prior to Janaury 1, 1991, the Director has the discretion to exempt from capital standards any institution that has submitted a business plan and meets certain other statutory criteria. Any exceptions granted under this authority must be on an institution-by-institution basis. The authority to grant exemptions under this provision expires on January 1, 1991 and any exemption previously granted under this authority expires at that time.

FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH CAPITAL STANDARDS

Any savings association, which upon the date of enactment of this Act is not in compliance with the new capital standards, shall have 60 days from the effective date of final regulations adopted pursuant to this Act to seek a temporary exception from capital standards. To seek such an exception a savings association must submit a business plan acceptable to the Director addressing how the savings association will work towards compliance with applicable capital standards. Any savings association which has submitted such a completed business plan shall not be deemed to be in violation of capital standards established by the Act until such business plan has been rejected by the Director. However, the Director may place an asset growth restriction on such institution pending review of the institution's business plan.

After January 1, 1991, an institution not in compliance with capital standards shall be subject to mandatory asset growth restrictions specified under Title III of this Act, and is required to adhere to a capital directive issued by the Director which will establish a plan for bringing the institution into compliance with all applicable standards.

An institution may submit an application for an exemption to the Director, and have such application approved by the Director. This application must include a business plan, which must also be approved by the Director prior to the granting of any exemption. The business plan must outline how the institution plans to work toward complying with capital standards by a specified date. If the application for exemption is approved, the Director may not take any enforcement action based on failure to comply with the minimum capital requirements.

After December 31, 1990, as increased capital standards take effect (e.g. with the phase-out of supervisory goodwill from capital), an institution must apply for and receive an exemption before the increased standard takes effect; otherwise, the institution must be placed under a capital directive. Should an institution be placed under a capital directive for failure to comply with capital standards, the Director may remove the imposed capital directive following the approval of an application for an exemption by the institution.

The Director may act upon and approve any application for an exemption from applicable sanctions prior to January 1, 1991. Any application for an exemption approved prior to January 1, 1991, will supersede any previously approved temporary exemption from capital standards.

Approval for an exemption from applicable sanctions for failing to meet capital standards does not exempt an institution from specified restrictions on asset growth or the requirement to submit an acceptable business plan to the Director.

If an exemption is granted by the Director, the institution is only exempted from sanctions resulting from capital noncompliance. Sanctions imposed due to any other violations of safety and soundness are not covered under the exemption. An exemption approved by the Director does not prevent FDIC from imposing sanctions or other enforcement action on the FDIC's authority.

In acting upon a proposed business plan the regulator may give priority consideraton to an institution's tangible capital and the institution's ability to meet the increasing requirements of subsequent periods. An institution that fails capital standards should not be treated more harshly than an institution with identical tangible capital that meets the total core capital requirement only because of intangibles.

Qualified Thrift Lender Test

The qualified thrift lender (QTL) test mandates that a savings association maintain a minimum percentage of its assets in housing finance and related activities. The bill reenacts the current QTL test until July 1, 1991, at which point a new test goes into effect. Assets qualifying under the new test are specifically defined so as to prevent the inclusion of other assets by regulatory interpretation. Penalties for failure to comply with the QTL test are substantially increased, and apply for any failures occurring more than one year after the date of enactment.

Commercial Real-Estate Lending

A Federal savings association may currently devote up to 40 percent of its assets to loans secured by nonresidential real property, regardless of whether the association has any capital. Under the bill, such loans may not, in the aggregate, exceed 400 percent of the savings association's capital. The Director is given limited discretion to allow such loans to account for a higher proportion of a savings association's capital. The Director must, however, find that the additional amount will pose no significant risk to the safe or sound operation of the institution involved, and that the increased authority is consistent with prudent operating practices. If an institution is permitted to exceed the 400-percent limit, DOTS must closely monitor the institution's condition so as to ensure compliance with all applicable laws. A transition rule provides a more lenient standard under which the Director may permit a savings association to exceed the 400-percent limit until June 1, 1991.

Limits on Loans to One Borrower

The bill generally makes savings associations subject to the same limit on loans to one borrower as apply to national banks. The limits are incorporated by reference, and are self-executing. Exceptions are provided for loans of up to $500,000 and real-estate construction loans. There is a special rule for loans made to finance the sale of property acquired by foreclosure.

Transactions With Affiliates

The bill establishes a uniform approach to regulating transactions with affiliates, based on sections 23A, 23B, and 22(h) of the Federal Reserve Act. The limits in those sections are incorporated by reference, and are self-executing. Under new section 11(a), a savings association must comply with sections 23A and 23B of the Federal Reserve Act in the same manner and to the same extent as if the savings association were a member bank.

Three additional rules apply to savings associations under the bill, reflecting the fact that affiliates of savings associations can engage in a far greater range of activities than affiliates of banks, and can thus expose the savings association to greater risk. First, a savings association may not make any loan or other extension of credit to an affiliate unless that affiliate is engaged only in activities permissible for bank holding companies. Second, a savings association may not purchase or invest in securities issued by an affiliate (other than securities of a subsidiary). Third, the Director may for reasons of safety and soundness impose more stringent restrictions on savings associations, but may not exempt transactions from or otherwise abridge section 23A or 23B. Exemptions from section 23A or 23B may be granted only by the Federal Reserve Board, as is currently the case with respect to all FDIC-insured banks.

TITLE IV. TRANSFERS OF FUNCTIONS, PERSONNEL AND PROPERTY

Title IV of the conference report provides for the transfer of personnel and administrative property of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to the agencies to which other titles of the Act transfer the functions of the FSLIC or the Bank Board. These agencies are the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Federal Housing Finance Board, and the Resolution Trust Corporation. This title also defines the rights of the Federal employees who will be transferred.

Title IV also provides for the interim management of the personnel and property of the Bank Board and the FSLIC pending the transfer of such personnel and property within 60 days of enactment of the Act.

The conference report also provides for the continuation of litigation to which the FSLIC, the Board or a Federal Home Bank acting under delegated authority is a party as well as the continued enforceability of orders, resolutions, determinations and regulations of the FSLIC and the Bank Board.

A procedure is established for the reconciliation of the different interpretations by the FSLIC and the FDIC of the scope of deposit insurance coverage for thrift institutions and banks as well as a procedure for the substitution of new indexes used to calculate interest under adjustable rate mortgage instruments.

TREATMENT OF REFERENCES IN ADJUSTABLE RATE MORTGAGE INSTRUMENTS

There are several points the Conferees wish to emphasize regarding the application of this provision.

First, where an ARM contract specifies that, in the event an index is no longer available, a specifically designated alternate will be substituted, that contractual agreement will control, and the alternate index may be employed without resort to the agency approval process.

Second, in the event an agency no longer maintains an index, the contract will govern absolutely until such time as the substitution process is completed. Thus, for example, if the contract allows the lender to substitute a "substantially similar" index for an index that no longer is available, that substitution can be effected until such time as the agency makes a determination of an appropriate substitute.

Finally, where the agency does embark upon an index substitution procedure, its objective should be to develop an index that displays, to the maximum extent possible, the historical movement characteristics of the original index agreed to between the parties. A substitute that was based on substantially similar data but that failed in that key regard would be inappropriate.

TITLE V. FINANCING FOR THRIFT RESOLUTIONS

SUBTITLE A.—RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION

Oversight Board and Resolution Trust Corporation Established

CREATION AND STATUS OF OVERSIGHT BOARD AND RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION

This section adds a new section 21A to the Federal Home Loan Bank Act establishing the structure under which insolvent savings associations will be resolved. This structure is primarily the Administration's proposal as modified by additional comments made by the Administration during the course of the conference. Section 501 establishes the Oversight Board, a government instrumentality that is ultimately accountable for the operations of the Resolutions Trust Corporation ("RTC"), a mixed-ownership Government corporation.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURES ACT

Both the RTC and its Oversight Board will constitute an "agency" for purposes of title 5 of the United States Code, provided however that when the RTC is acting in its capacity as conservator or receiver it shall have the same status as the FDIC acting in such a capacity. The Freedom of Information Act, in subsection (b)(8), exempts from disclosure certain information related to the regulation or supervision of financial institutions. Neither the Oversight Board nor the RTC, whether in its corporate capacity or in its capacity as conservator or receiver, act as a supervisor or regulator of insured depository institutions. The appropriate Federal bank regulatory agency retains such status for all purposes, including the Freedom of Information Act.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE OVERSIGHT BOARD

The RTC will operate under the direction of an Oversight Board composed of the Secretary of the Treasury who shall serve as Chairperson, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and two independent persons chosen by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. The independent members cannot hold any other appointed position and may be from the private sector. The public officials who are members of the Oversight Board may delegate any activity to another member, officer or employee of such agency or entity, except for attendance at the quarterly meeting required hereunder.

The Oversight Board will review and have overall responsibility for the RTC's activities. The Oversight Board will not, however, be involved in or responsible for case specific matters involving individual institutions, specific asset dispositions or generally the day-to-day operations of the RTC. The Oversight Board has the general power to hire employees, use employees of other agencies, prescribe bylaws, enter into contracts and exercise any incidental powers necessary to carry out its functions. The compensation of Oversight Board employees must be consistent with that of FDIC employees. The Conferees have allowed such hiring authority in reliance upon the Administration's statements that the Oversight Board will hire a small staff because of the limited functions performed by the Oversight Board. Notwithstanding the requirement that the employees of the Oversight Board be paid as if they were employees of a Federal banking regulatory agency, the Oversight Board will only oversee the actions of the RTC. The Oversight Board is not a supervisory or regulatory agency.

The specific duties of the Oversight Board include establishing the strategic plans and overall goals of the RTC, approving periodic financing requests, reviewing the performance of the RTC, establishing national and regional advisory boards, and approving all rules, regulations and guidelines of the RTC. The Oversight Board, after consultation with the RTC, may require modification of any such rule, regulation or guideline so long as the rules and regulations adopted for the operation of conservatorships and receiverships are consistent with the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. The review of such guidelines does not extend to the RTC's internal administrative policies.

Development of Strategic Plan

In consultation with the RTC, the Oversight Board shall develop a strategic plan to be submitted to Congress by December 31, 1989. The strategic plan shall incorporate a sufficiently detailed description of the goals of and methods to be used by the RTC in its case resolution activities to enable Congress to exercise its responsibility to monitor the progress of the Oversight Board and the RTC. The strategic plan, at a minimum, shall include the factors for selecting the priority for the resolution of failed thrifts, the standards for selecting the appropriate resolution method, measurement standards for RTC's overall progress, and the various other procedures to provide for the fair and efficient operation of the RTC. However, by listing some specific areas of concern to be addressed in the strategic plan, the Conferees do not intend to exclude other matters appropriate for oversight, such as disposition of assets in distressed areas.

Structure of the RTC

The FDIC will be the exclusive manager of the RTC unless removed pursuant to subsection (m). The Board of Directors of the FDIC will be the Board of Directors of the RTC and the Chairperson of the FDIC Board of Directors will be the Chairperson of the RTC Board of Directors.

Powers and Duties of the Resolution Trust Corporation

The RTC's primary purposes are: (1) to resolve cases involving institutions that once were FSLIC-insured and that are placed in a conservatorship or receivership between January 1, 1989, and three years from the date of enactment of this legislation; (2) to liquidate the Federal Asset Disposition Association ("FADA") within 180 days of the date of enactment; and (3) to conduct its operations so as to maximize recovery on assets it acquires, minimize the impact of its activities on local markets, make efficient use of its funds, minimize losses incurred in resolving cases, and maximize preservation of affordable housing.

In dealing with institutions in its custody, the RTC will exercise the FDIC's conservatorship and receivership powers. These include the power to operate an institution as a going concern, to facilitate its acquisition or to liquidate it.

The RTC will exist until December 31, 1996, after which its assets and liabilities will pass to the FSLIC Resolution Fund.

Review of 1988 Deals

The RTC shall review all assisted thrift acquisitions approved by the FSLIC after January 1, 1988, and report to the Oversight Board and the Congress the results of that review. The RTC shall exercise all the rights that FSLIC had to modify, renegotiate, or restructure assistance agreements where savings can be realized. Any gains or losses from exercising such rights would accrue to the RTC or the FSLIC Resolution Fund, as the Oversight Board determines.

Utilization of Private Resources

In carrying out its responsibilities, the RTC shall rely on private-sector services to the extent it determines that such services are available and their use is practicable and efficient. This provision is not intended to create any private right of action. This provision grants the RTC the authority to use private sector resources in order to minimize the reliance upon government sources and is a reflection of the standard by which Congress will measure the performance of RTC.

Performance of RTC Functions

The RTC will have both general corporate powers and certain special powers with which to perform its functions. The RTC will have no employees unless the Oversight Board exercises its removal powers. The RTC may enter into contracts including contracts for insurance, or joint venture agreements, make progress payments, exercise all the usual incidents of ownership with respect to the property it acquires, sue and be sued in its corporate capacity, make loans, take warrants, equity positions or other similar interests in assets or institutions, use the United States mails on the same basis as an agency of the United States, and exercise any incidental power necessary to carry out its duties. The specific delineation or omission of any contractual power is not intended to create any negative inference with regard to the extent of the RTC's general power to contract.

The RTC will have the power under its Federal Deposit Insurance Act powers to create new entities during the course of its case resolution activities. In section 501, this power is expressly recognized in the provisions allowing the RTC to create federal savings associations and bridge banks. During the period these entities are under the RTC's control, the RTC will be able to set certain standards for these entities. A bridge bank may be under the RTC's control during its entire existence; a federal savings association is under RTC's control until there is an actual acquirer and for so long as the RTC is providing assistance to, or has other contractual obligations with, the federal savings association. Except for those standards specifically reserved by statute for the RTC, such institutions will be subject to all laws and regulations generally applicable to them as enforced by the appropriate Federal banking regulatory agency. Once such institution is no longer under RTC's control and RTC's standards become inoperative, the institution will be under the appropriate Federal bank regulatory agency and governed by all the laws and regulations applicable to institutions with similar charters.

The RTC also has special powers and may require the merger or consolidation of an institution in its jurisdiction pursuant to applicable standards.

Regulations and Procedures

The Oversight Board and the RTC shall issue regulations pursuant to the Administrative Procedures Act. Such rules are subject to the review of the Oversight Board as set forth above. Regulations or procedures adopted by the RTC relating to its exercise of the FDIC's rights and powers under the FDI Act must accord with that Act and with the FDIC's regulations.

Documentation of Decisions

The RTC must adopt written procedures for selling or otherwise disposing of insured institutions and their assets, and must document its decisions and reasons. The RTC must document decisions so that any transaction involving the exercise of its statutory powers may be adequately reviewed. These procedures must provide for adequate competition, and fair and consistent treatment of offerors, and minimize the cost to the RTC consistent with the overall goals of the RTC.

Asset Disposal in Distressed Areas

The RTC must adopt special asset-disposition procedures to protect the economies of distressed areas. The RTC must set a minimum disposition price for real property that it owns before it sells that property. The procedures for setting that price, and the discretion to approve specific transactions for lesser amounts, are intended to protect against the dumping of assets while retaining the flexibility needed to make sound business decisions. This provision and the provisions for the disposition of residential properties found in subsection (c) require that the provisions of the latter program apply to the eligible property first. Once the requirements of subsection (c) no longer apply to a particular property, the distressed area property rules apply.

Structure of RTC and Advisory Boards

The FDIC operates as exclusive manager of the RTC unless it is replaced by the Oversight Board. The FDIC shall establish a Real Estate Asset Division to assist and advise the Corporation with respect to the management, sale or other disposition of real property assets. The Real Estate Asset Division will perform asset inventories and such other duties as the FDIC prescribes. The inventory shall identify properties with natural, cultural, recreational or scientific values of special significance. The creation of this inventory does not impose any duty on the RTC with respect to such properties or create any liabilities for the RTC in connection with such properties.

In addition, the Oversight Board shall establish national and regional advisory boards to advise the Oversight Board and the RTC with respect to asset management and disposition. Such boards will bring local expertise and concerns to bear on the Oversight Board's strategic decisions and the RTC's decisions regarding asset disposition.

Funding

To carry out its functions, the RTC will receive the proceeds of up to $50 billion of obligations issued by the Resolution Funding Corporation ("REFCORP"), as well as whatever cash its activities generate. The RTC may also borrow up to $5 billion from the Treasury. The RTC cannot obligate the FDIC or any of its insurance funds. The RTC shall provide the Oversight Board with periodic detailed funding requests.

Federal Asset Disposition Association

The RTC shall liquidate the Federal Asset Disposition Association ("FADA") within 180 days of enactment of this Act. In liquidating the FADA, the RTC should not sell FADA's name.

Exemption From Taxation

The Oversight Board and the RTC will be exempt from taxation, other than taxes on real property.

FSLIC Liabilities

The RTC succeeds to the FSLIC's liabilities as guarantee of certain loans made by the Federal Reserve Banks and Federal Home Loan Banks ("Lenders") to insured savings associations before the bill becomes law. The RTC must, within one year, repay any outstanding indebtedness not repaid by such savings associations to the Lenders. Any claim by a Lender shall have priority over all obligations of the RTC. If the resources of the RTC are insufficient to pay the obligations to the Lenders, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such obligations.

Note Cap

The RTC cannot issue obligations in excess of the total amount of unused REFCORP borrowing, RTC's cash, and 85 percent of the fair market value of RTC's other assets. Obligations of the RTC that have a stated principal amount and a stated maturity date shall be backed by the full faith and credit of the United States.

Reports and Congressional Appearances

The RTC must make both annual and semiannual reports to Congress. Annual reports must include financial statements, as well as the RTC's financial operating plans and forecasts. Semiannual reports must contain the same types of information as annual reports, plus certain items important for Congressional oversight.

The Comptroller General must audit the RTC annually, unless the Comptroller General notifies the RTC at least 180 days before the end of the fiscal year. If the Comptroller General gives such notice, the RTC must arrange to be audited by the independent certified public accountant. The Comptroller General will have access to all books and records of the RTC and its agents.

One of the reports to Congress includes a report on agreement entered into by the RTC with third parties that acquire institutions with assistance from the RTC. Such assistance agreements must also be disclosed to the public unless the Oversight Board, by unanimous vote, determines that disclosure would be harmful to the public interest. It is the intent of the Congress that these agreements be disclosed and that such public interest exception be rarely used and narrowly construed.

Termination of FDIC as exclusive manager

Because the Oversight Board will be ultimately responsible for the operations of RTC, the Oversight Board will be able to remove the FDIC as exclusive manager, but only under extraordinary circumstances. Such extraordinary circumstances are defined by the statute as: a material figure to adhere to the strategic plan or to meet the RTC's programs or activities; willful violation of the Act or the RTC's policies; or a continuing failure to obtain consideration at least nearly equivalent to the market value for assets sold by the RTC. Neither the disposition of property under subsection (c), the special provisions for eligible residential properties, nor the disposition of property in distressed areas at less than 95% of market value, pursuant to the exceptions provided therein, shall constitute a failure to obtain consideration at least nearly equivalent to market value.

STANDARDS OF CONDUCT FOR RTC INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS

Unless the Oversight Board exercises its authorities to remove the FDIC, the RTC will have no employees. The FDIC as exclusive manager will use its employees to perform many of the functions of the RTC. The RTC must adopt conflict-of-interest and ethical standards for such persons who are operating in the capacity of an employee that are at least as stringent as those applicable to FDIC employees. In addition, the RTC, through the FDIC will contract with other private persons to provide other services. Such private persons may have responsibility for vast amounts of what are, in substance, Federal resources. To ensure that such persons act for the public good rather than for personal gain, the Oversight Board must adopt ethical standards for independent contractors consistent with Titles 18 and 41 of the United States Code and independent contractors acting on behalf of the RTC will be subject to the same criminal sanctions as FDIC employees for bribery.

The Conferees are mindful of the abuses that have taken place with respect to the awarding of contracts and the consulting arrangements and political favoritism shown by the Department of Housing and Urban Development in its housing programs. The Oversight Board is directly accountable for ensuring that there are no similar problems in the administration of the RTC. Given the large amounts of funds to be expended on this matter, Congress expects the Oversight Board and FDIC as exclusive manager to be vigilant and aggressive in its pursuit of the highest ethical standards at the RTC. A failure to propose, adopt, implement or enforce adequate ethical standards would constitute the extraordinary grounds necessary for dismissal of the FDIC under the Oversight Board's authority to remove the FDIC as exclusive manager.

The FDIC as exclusive manager will be using its personnel to perform the functions of the RTC. Persons who are under the direct supervision of an employee or officer of the FDIC are the functional equivalent of a government employee and shall be subject to the full range of criminal sanctions that are applicable to federal government employees. For the purposes of this section, acting under the direct supervision of an employee would necessarily include, but is not be limited to, any person making or implementing a decision to provide assistance pursuant to the RTC's statutory powers. Other Federal criminal sanctions, such as those for bank fraud and misapplication of funds, would continue to apply to any person acting on behalf of a conservator or receiver for institutions that are covered by such statutes.

The RTC is required to adopt conflict of interest regulations applicable to independent contractors consistent with the goals and purposes of the Ethics in Government Act. Under such standard, the regulations adopted by the RTC shall prohibit a contractor with the RTC from acquiring an interest in an institution with respect to which the contractor has rendered services to the RTC, or advising potential acquirers with respect to that institution. Further, such regulations shall prevent the unauthorized use of non-public information obtained through providing services to the RTC. Such restrictions on the use of information should include items such as: (1) requiring independent contractors to take all reasonable measures to avoid unintentional or inadvertent disclosure of such information; (2) prohibiting the use of any nonpublic information for private gain by the contractor or any person with whom the contractor has on ongoing relationship, such as its counsel; and (3) requiring that the contractor treat all information gained by it as a result of services performed for the RTC as non-public information unless specifically authorized in writing by the RTC. Non-public information does not lose its character as such for a particular contractor until it has become a part of the body of public information from a source other than that contractor.

Inspector General

The RTC will have a presidentially appointed Inspector General who will report to both the Board of Directors of the RTC and the Oversight Board.

Disposition of Residential Properties

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate bill that would give nonprofit organizations, public agencies and lower income families a 90-day right of first refusal to purchase eligible residential property which the RTC is required to sell. Eligible residential property means, in the case of single family units, units costing less than $67,500 and, in the case of multifamily units, units ranging from $28,032 to $58,392, depending upon the number of bedrooms. Not less than 20 percent of the dwelling units sold during this period would be reserved for very low-income families (incomes do not exceed 50 percent of median income) and not less than an additional 15 percent would be reserved for lower income families (incomes do not exceed 80 percent of median income). The RTC could sell a property at a price below the net realizable market value and could provide financing at a reduced interest rate to the extent necessary to fulfill the lower income occupancy requirements. If no qualified nonprofit, public agency, or lower income family made a bona fide offer within a 3-month period, then the RTC may offer to sell the property to any qualified purchaser. The RTC would publish a listing of eligible residential properties (for each 3-month period) available to any person upon request and available for public inspection in the central and regional offices of the Federal home loan banks.

The conference agreement contains the House proposal with a number of significant changes.

Disposition of Eligible Single Family Property

For the first three months after a single family property is made available for sale, the RTC would be allowed to sell the property only to two classes of eligible purchasers: (a) homebuyers whose income does not exceed 115 percent of area median and who intend to live in the property as their principal residence and (b) public agencies and nonprofit organizations (including limited equity cooperatives) who agree either to resell the units to lower income families or to provide rental housing affordable to lower income families for the remaining useful life of the property. Eligible single family properties are those single family properties that are appraised at $67,500 or less. After the three month period, if an eligible single family property is not subject to a purchase offer, anyone (including a for-profit investor) may purchase the property. The RTC will develop appropriate guidelines for settlement and closing of sales involving single-family residences.

In order to enhance the purchasing power of eligible purchasers, the conference report provides a mechanism by which such purchasers may be given an early look at eligible residential properties. Within a reasonable time after the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC), in its corporate capacity or as receiver, acquires title to a single family property, it must provide information on the property's location, condition (including current occupancy and age), and fair market value to certain clearinghouses. It is expected that this initial information will be provided quickly, even before clear title is acquired in some cases. The clearinghouses would be responsible for passing on property information to eligible purchasers. The purpose of this notice process is to alert eligible purchasers of the availability of the property early enough for inspections, rehabilitation estimates and bona fide offers to be prepared. Reasonable access to the properties for purposes of inspection must be given to these eligible purchasers. The lower income occupancy requirements must be included in a deed or other recorded instrument. The conference report makes the lower income occupancy requirements judicially enforceable against owners by affected very low- and lower-income families, State housing finance agencies and agencies, authorities or corporations of the United States. The conferees intend that affected very low- and lower-income families include families who are renting a particular property as well as families who would be eligible to rent. The conference report does not impose resale restrictions on properties sold to lower income households. However, public agencies or nonprofit organizations that purchase single family properties for subsequent resale to lower income households may impose such restrictions to assure long-term availability of the properties for lower income purchasers.

The clearinghouses are entities that have a particular interest in the provision of affordable housing, particularly housing that serves lower income households. They include State housing finance agencies where the properties are located, the Office of Community Investment (or comparable division in the Federal Housing Finance Board) and any national nonprofit organization (including any nonprofit entity established by the National Housing Partnerships) that the Corporation determines has a capacity to act as a clearinghouse. Organizations such as the Council of State Housing Agencies, the National Low Income Housing Coalition, the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, ACORN, LISC, and the Enterprise Foundation are some of the national nonprofit organizations that might be willing and appropriate to undertaken these functions, under contract with the Resolution Trust Corporation. State housing finance agencies, because of their location in each State, their expertise in the financing of home ownership and lower income rental projects, as well as their role in allocating federal tax credits are particularly well suited to assume the clearinghouse function. To help induce organizations, particularly national nonprofit organizations, to act as clearinghouses, the conference report provides that clearinghouses shall not have legal liability for failure to comply, when acting as clearinghouses, with the requirements of this subsection.

MULTIFAMILY RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY DISPOSITION

Initial Notice Period and Bona Fide Offer

The conferees believe that the disposition of multifamily properties will differ greatly from the disposition of single family property. Most multifamily properties will undergo a natural holding period before they can be made ready for sale. During this period, RTC will most likely need to clear title, repair the properties and establish the market value. Depending on the condition of individual properties and the extent of encumbrances upon title, this period may range from weeks to months to years.

Given these inherent differences between single family and multifamily disposition, the conference report establishes a more detailed early look process for multifamily properties than for single-family residences. The process would operate as follows. Within a reasonable time after the RTC in its corporate or receivership capacity, acquires title to a multifamily property, it must provide information on the property's location, condition (including current occupancy and age) and fair market value to specified clearinghouses. Once again it is expected that this information will be provided in a timely manner even before clear title is acquired and before the RTC is ready to offer the property for sale. (The RTC, however, has the authority to enter into negotiations for sale before a property is formally offer for sale.) The clearinghouses are the same entities that will be providing information about the single family properties. They would be responsible for passing on the property information to "qualifying multifamily purchasers"—public agencies, nonprofit organizations and for-profit organizations that make an upfront commitment to comply with the lower income occupancy requirements described below.

A qualifying multifamily purchaser would be required to express, by written notice, a serious interest in purchasing a particular property (a) within 90 days of the date the clearinghouses receive notice from the RTC or (b) by the time a property is ready for sale, whichever occurs earlier. The RTC may by regulation or order prescribe the required form and content of an expression of "serious interest." In so prescribing, the conferees intend the RTC to protect itself and the overall asset disposition process from frivolous expressions of interest by organizations that may, in fact, be seeking nothing more than to preserve for themselves the widest range of options. At a minimum, "serious interest" should entail a reasonable probability that the organization expressing interest could in fact accomplish a purchase of the subject property, and a good faith commitment on the part of the organization to work toward preparing a bona fide offer for the property.

Upon determining that a property is ready for sale, the RTC would be required to provide written notice to those qualifying multifamily purchasers that have expressed a serious interest in a property. Such purchasers would then be given 45 days to make a bona fide offer to purchase the property. The conferees believe only a limited number of multifamily properties will be ready for sale less than 90 days after the date clearinghouses receive notice from the RTC. The RTC should develop appropriate guidelines for settlement and closing of multifamily properties.

The lower income targeting requirements in the conference report are similar to those included in the House bill. At least 20% of the units must be made available for occupancy by and shall be maintained as affordable to very low income families for the remaining useful life of the property and at least an additional 15% of the units shall be available for occupancy by and shall be maintained as affordable to lower income families. The remaining useful life of the property is not determined by tax law principles but is intended to cover the property as long as it is habitable and assumes good faith efforts by the purchaser to maintain the property and to rehabilitate it as necessary. A rental unit will be considered affordable as long as the rent charged to tenants on a lower-income unit does not exceed 30% of 65% of the area median income and the rent charged to tenants on a very low-income unit does not exceed 30% of 50% of the area median income. The conferees recognize that the established caps on tenant rent contributions might cause hardship in individual circumstances. Yet, these restrictions on tenant contributions to rent are necessary to facilitate the underwriting of private financing for the acquisition of multifamily properties. Subject to the availability of funds, the conferees fully expect Section 8 rental assistance—both tenant-based and project-based—to be used in conjunction with these properties. Where Section 8 rental assistance is available, tenant contributions to rent will be 30 percent of an individual tenant's adjusted income and actual rents will probably exceed the caps contained in the statute. These lower income targeting requirements may be exceeded in any project and preference between substantially similar offers for individual multifamily properties or blocks of single family and multifamily properties will be given to those offers that propose to house more lower income families for longer periods of time. This preference applies to all offers, even those made after the statutory serious interest and bona fide offer periods. All agreements related to lower income targeting must be recorded in a deed or other legal instrument and are, therefore, applicable to subsequent purchasers. The conference report makes the lower income occupancy requirements judicially enforceable against owners by affected very low- and lower-income families, State housing finance agencies and agencies, authorities or corporations of the United States. The conferees intend that affected very low- and lower-income families include families who are renting a dwelling unit in a particular multifamily development as well as families who would be eligible to rent.

The lower income occupancy requirements applicable to multifamily sales may be reduced for a temporary period if the HUD Secretary or the State housing financing agency in the State where the property is located determines that compliance with those requirements is no longer financially feasible. It is expected that such reductions will be given for short time periods. The owner must make good faith efforts to secure the funds necessary to permit continued lower income occupancy and affordability and to reduce costs through refinancing or other means. This exemption must be reviewed annually, no tenant may be displaced if the reduction is granted and the owner must show good faith efforts to restore the lower income occupancy to the levels required by statute. If a property was part of a bulk sale in which occupancy restrictions were applied on an aggregate basis, the HUD Secretary or the State housing finance agency should look at the earnings and costs associated with all properties on an aggregate basis to determine whether compliance with the occupancy restrictions on one property is financially infeasible.

Bulk Sales

The amendment authorizes the sale of properties individually or as a group. Any single or multifamily offers made during the expression of serious interest period or initial purchase offer period must meet the lower income targeting requirements. For single family properties, the restrictions apply to each property. For multifamily properties, the requirements apply in the aggregate so that properties rented at market rate could be used to cross-subsidize properties containing a higher proportion of lower income families. If a multifamily property has been identified during the serious interest period for an individual purchase it may not be considered as part of a bulk sale unless no purchase offer is subsequently made during the bona fide offer period.

The conferees are aware of an interesting proposal made by the National Housing Partnership (NHP), a congressionally chartered organization. Under NHP's proposal, RTC would sell a significant number of multifamily properties at book value to a nonprofit foundation established by the NHP. The nonprofit foundation would subsequently place conventional first mortgages on each property, remitting to RTC a substantial amount of the proceeds of the first mortgage financing and giving RTC a note for the difference between the first mortgage amount and book value. The first mortgages would come from reputable mortgage lenders which use appraisal methods acceptable to RTC. The foundation would sell the properties within a fifteen year period and, upon each sale, RTC (or its successor in interest) will receive sales proceeds, as a first priority after the mortgage holder to cover the difference between the first mortgage and the second note. The foundation would be bound by the lower income occupancy requirements of the conference report. Because RTC would sell each property at book value, which the conferees believe to be far in excess of the market value in most instances, RTC could expedite sales of properties to the foundation, saving itself a significant investment of time and resources which would ordinarily be required to set market value and ready property for sale. The conference report would permit this type of portfolio sale any time after the serious interest period as long as the properties were not identified for individual purchase by qualified multifamily purchasers.

Financing of Sale

Sale Price

The RTC is directed to establish a market value for each eligible residential property. Through negotiations, the RTC is required to sell a property at the net realizable market value which is the price below the market value that takes into account any reductions in holding costs resulting from expedited sale of a property, including but not limited to forgone real estate taxes, insurance, maintenance expenses, security costs and the loss of use of its funds as well as the avoidance, if applicable, of fees paid to real estate brokers, auctioneers or other individuals usually involved in the sale of RTC property. The conferees intend the term "maintenance expenses" to include repairs or capital costs necessary to ready properties for sale as well as repairs necessary to enable continued occupancy during the period a property is being prepared for sale. The RTC may agree to a sales price that is below the net realizable market value to the extent such a reduction expedites the sale and enables a lower income family to purchase a unit or enables a public agency or nonprofit agency to comply with the lower income occupancy requirement. The RTC may not sell a property below the net realizable market value to enable a for-profit purchaser to meet the lower income targeting requirements. A willingness to negotiate a lower sales price on these properties may be critical to making such properties affordable to lower income homeowners and lower and very low income renters.

Seller Financing

The RTC is also authorized to provide seller financing as a first or second mortgage for all or part of the purchase price of any residential property. This mortgage financing may be provided at a subsidized rate if necessary to meet the lower income occupancy requirement by lower income purchasers or by nonprofit or State or local government purchasers agreeing to meet the lower income occupancy requirements. Once again, this assistance is not available to for-profit purchasers.

Other Federal Assistance

The House bill authorized additional funds for several housing assistance programs administered by HUD and FmHA for use in conjunction with the disposition of these assets. The conference report does not authorize those funds but it does direct the Secretary of HUD to take actions to expedite the processing of applications for assistance under a number of programs: Section 202 elderly and handicapped housing, the homeless assistance programs, the urban homesteading program, all of the programs under the U.S. Housing Act of 1937, including Section 8 and rental rehabilitation grants as well as FHA mortgage insurance under the National Housing Act. Similarly the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to expedite the processing of applications for assistance under any of the FmHA programs. The availability of assistance under any of these programs and from other State or local government sources should be taken into consideration when the RTC agrees on a final purchase price or the provision of subsidized financing.

The HUD urban homesteading program and the FmHA loan guarantee program are amended to assure they may be used in conjunction with the disposition of these properties.

Third Party Rights

The conference report contains a provision designed to protect purchasers of eligible residential property against challenges to their title based upon RTC's failure to comply with the special disposition rules.

TITLE VI. THRIFT ACQUISITION ENHANCEMENT PROVISION

Title VI amends the Bank Holding Company Act in an effort to attract additional private capital to the thrift industry.

The Federal Reserve Board is given the specific authority to permit the acquisition of a savings association by a bank holding company under section IV of the Bank Holding Company Act. All nonbanking restrictions and other criteria under that section will continue to apply. However, the Conferees intend that the Board not impose tandem restrictions on the activities of the savings associations and affiliated companies unless such restrictions are required under law. Prior tandem restrictions imposed by the Board are to be lifted.

The Bank Holding Company Act is also amended to clarify that companies controlling so-called grandfathered nonbank banks may, within certain limits, make strictly passive investments in the shares of a nonaffiliated bank or savings association.

The title also permits companies that control nonbank banks to acquire certain "qualified" shares issued by troubled savings associations or savings and loan holding companies. Such a company will not be deemed to control the troubled association or holding company solely by reason of the control of such shares so long as the holding company observes the limitations for the qualified stock issuance. One of these requires that the thrift not be a subsidiary of the holding company and that the holding company not make the investment with a view towards obtaining control of the thrift. This means that the investment must be strictly passive. The holding company may not directly or indirectly exercise a controlling influence over the management and policies of the thrift.

Certain technical and conforming amendments are made to the Bank Holding Company Act to take into account other changes made by the bill.

TITLE VII. FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK SYSTEM REFORMS

FEDERAL HOUSING FINANCE BOARD ESTABLISHED

The overall purpose of this Subtitle is to restructure and refocus the thrift industry by separating the deposit insurance, the chartering and the credit allocation functions for housing finance. Under this section, the Federal Home Loan Bank Act is amended by the addition of a new section 2A under which the Federal Housing Finance Board is established as an independent agency in the Executive branch of the Federal government to oversee the Federal Home Loan Banks (Banks). Subsections (b), (c) and (d) provide for the composition and terms of the Board of Directors of the Board. The Board is composed of five members, including the Secretary of HUD and four citizens of the U.S. appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The appointive directors of the Board hold office for a term of seven years; however, the initial members of the Board are appointed for terms of two, three, five, and seven years to provide for staggered board membership in the future. The directors are appointed from among persons with extensive experience or training in housing finance or with a commitment to the provision of specialized housing credit, and at least one director must be chosen from organizations with more than a two-year history of representing consumer or community interests on banking services, credit needs, housing or financial consumer protections. The organizations can be involved in any one of the four areas identified in the Act and the Committee does not intend to require that the consumer representative have experience in all four areas.

No appointive director can hold any other appointive office during his or her term as director. Not more than three directors can be members of the same political party and no more than one of the directors can be appointed from any single Bank district. No appointive member of the Board may, during such director's term of office, be an officer or director of any Bank or a stockholder, officer or director of any member of a Bank. This provision is not intended to preclude an investment in a diversified mutual fund that in turn may own shares of a savings association.

The President designates one of the appointive members to be the Chairperson of the Board. In the Chairperson's absence or disability, the duties of the Chairperson are performed by another member of the Board to be designated in advance by the Chairperson.

This section also adds a new section 2B establishing the powers and duties of the Federal Housing Finance Board. The legislation transfers to the Board the existing authority of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to supervise the activities of the Banks. The Board is directed to ensure that the Banks carry out their housing finance mission, remain adequately capitalized and able to raise funds in the capital markets, and are operated in a safe and sound manner.

As an independent agency in the Executive branch, the Board is subject to the Administrative Procedures Act, the Freedom of Information Act and the Government in the Sunshine Act. In addition, the Treasury Department's oversight and direction of the Director of the OTS does not extend, directly or indirectly, to the Federal Housing Finance Board, or to any office or joint office of a Bank, with respect to any credit related or correspondent banking activities.

The Federal Housing Finance Board has the authority to fix the compensation of employees, attorneys and agents of the Board without regard to provisions of law applicable to officers or employees of the United States. Nevertheless, the compensation of employees, attorneys and agents of the Board is subject to the comparability provisions of this Act.

The receipts of the Federal Housing Finance Board derived from assessments upon the Banks and from other sources, other than receipts from the sale of consolidated obligations, shall be deposited in the Treasury and may be withdrawn to defray the expenses of the Board and to pay the salaries of the employees of the Board.

The Board of Directors also has the power to suspend or remove for cause any director, officer, employee or agent of any Bank, or any joint office of the Banks. The cause of any such suspension or removal must be communicated in writing, in a timely fashion, to that director, officer, employee or agent, as well as the Bank or joint office.

In addition to the appointment of an inspector general, the Comptroller General of the United States is given the authority to audit and examine the activities of the Federal Housing Finance Board and the Banks, in order to determine the extent to which the Board and the Banks are fairly and effectively fulfilling the purposes of this Act.

TERMINATION OF THE FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the post of Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board are abolished consistent with Title IV.

Eligibility for Membership

The purpose of this section is to provide for expanded membership in the Banks to include Federally insured commercial banks and credit unions that engage in mortgage lending. A Federally insured bank or credit union would qualify for Bank membership if its financial condition is acceptable, its management and home-financing policy are consistent with sound economic home financing. Such institutions must have at least 10 percent of their assets in residential mortgage loans; including 1-4 family, multifamily and funded residential construction loans, to qualify for membership. Meeting the specific asset threshold test does not raise any presumption with respect to whether the applicant's policies are consistent with sound economic home financing. The member's access to advances, however, would be limited by that institution's demonstrated commitment to housing as provided under the advance section. This expansion of Bank membership is intended to promote and sustain housing finance and the Banks. The Committee believes that the extension of membership to insured commercial banks and credit unions that engage in mortgage lending will strengthen the Banks and their ability to support the mortgage market.

Repeal of Provision Relating to Rate of Interest on Deposits

This section repeals section 5B of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 1425b).

Capital Stock

This section removes outdated provisions relating to the minimum amount of capital stock that must be issued by a Bank, the subscription by the United States for a portion of the capital stock, and the subsequent retirement of the stock owned by the United States. This section further provides that at any time a member's membership in a Bank is terminated, all advances must be repaid and any penalties and other fees applicable to a repayment of such advances would apply.

Election of Bank Directors

Under this section, at least two appointive directors of each Bank must be chosen from organizations with more than a two-year history of representing consumer or community interests on banking services, credit needs, housing or financial consumer protections.

In providing for consumer representation on the Boards of the Banks, the Committee does not intend to force the removal of any existing directors. Instead, consumer representatives will be appointed to fill the earliest vacancies of existing appointive member positions, whether by resignation, removal or expiration of term. In addition, the organizations from which these individuals are selected can be involved in any one of the four identified areas and the Committee does not intend to require that they have experience in all four areas.

Also under this section, no appointive member of the Board of Directors of a Bank shall, during such director's term of office, be an officer or director of the Bank or a stockholder, officer or director of any member of that Bank. This provision is not intended to preclude investment in a diversified mutual fund that in turn may own shares of a savings association.

This section further provides that no person who is an officer or director of a member that fails to meet its applicable capital requirements may seek or hold the office of director of a Bank. The directors of each Bank shall determine the terms and conditions under which the Bank may indemnify its directors, officers, employees, or agents.

Repeal of Provision Relating to Certain Powers of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board

This section repeals section 19 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1439)) regarding the powers of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Powers and Duties of Banks

This section authorizes, but does not require, the Banks to make loans to the FDIC, for use of the Savings Association Insurance Fund. Under this section, any loans by the Banks for this purpose are a direct liability on the insurance fund. As is the case with all advances by the Banks, loans to the FDIC for the SAIF must be adequately secured as determined by the Board and the Bank. In addition, the interest on any such advances must be no less than the Bank's current marginal cost of funds.

Also under this provision, section 11 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1431)), is amended to provide that the Banks are permitted to engage in activities that are incidental to those expressly authorized by the Act. This incidental authority helps ensure that Bank members are able to provide economical housing finance.

For example, these activities include the collection and settlement of checks, and related services that the Banks can provide to or for members. The Banks can also provide courier and custody services for, and can process and transmit information related to these services. The Banks are also able to provide other correspondent banking services for members. This includes the reconciliation of customer accounts and servicing payrolls, as well as the analysis and transmission of such information.

Eligibility of Borrowers to Secure Advances

This provision amends section 9 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1449)) by removing obsolete language relating to nonmember borrowers. Entities that are not members are not eligible to borrow from the Banks.

The provision also amends section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1430)) by adding a community support requirement for access to long-term Bank advances.

Under this section, the Federal Housing Finance Board is required to adopt regulations, within two years after enactment of the Act, establishing standards of community investment or service for members of the Banks to maintain continued access by such members to advances. The section provides that the regulations promulgated by the Board shall take into account such factors as the member's performance under the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977, and that member's record of lending to first-time home buyers.

Administrative Expenses

This section provides the Federal Housing Finance Board with the power to levy, semiannually upon the Banks, an assessment sufficient to provide for the payment of the administrative expenses of the Board.

Under this section, the estimated expenses of the Board are to be allocated among the Banks on an equitable basis. Any surplus at the conclusion of any semiannual period will be deducted from the assessment for the following semiannual period. The Committee recognizes that the Board will need to make an immediate assessment on the Banks for the administrative expenses the Board is likely to incur in the first 60 to 90 days following enactment.

Therefore, this section includes a transitional provision for a one time special assessment on the Banks. Because of the separation of the regulatory and credit functions of the current Federal Home Loan Bank System, neither the Federal Housing Finance Board nor any of the Banks is subject to any assessment for the operation of the Office of Thrift Supervision, except as specifically provided in this Act.

Nonadministrative Expenses

This section repeals section 18 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1438a)) and section 19A of that Act (12 U.S.C. (1439-1)

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corportion Industry Advisory Committee

This section repeals section 21(i) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1441(i)) and thereby abolishes the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation Industry Advisory Committee.

Advances

This section amends section 10(a) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. (1430(a)) to provide that advances must be made on collateral sufficient, in the judgment of the particular Bank, to fully secure such advances. The section also provides that long-term advances can be made only for the purpose of providing funds for housing finance.

At the time a Bank makes or renews an advance, the Bank must obtain or maintain collateral eligible under certain designated categories. These categories limit the eligible collateral to the following low risk assets: current first residential mortgage loans and securities representing a whole interest in such loans; marketable federal agency securities; deposits at a Federal Home Loan Bank; and a limited basket of other real estate related collateral that is sufficiently liquid to have a readily ascertainable value.

Since these new collateral requirements only apply when an advance is made or renewed, they do not apply to advances existing at the time of enactment unless those advances are renewed. If, at the time an advance is renewed, the member institution meets all the specified collateral requirements except for the 30% restriction of Section 714(a)(4), the advance may be renewed at the discretion of the Federal Home Loan Bank. In such circumstances, the Federal Housing Finance Board shall, in consultation with the Resolution Trust Corporation, determine a repayment schedule for such renewed advances which is consistent with the sound operation of both the Bank and such member.

By allowing the Banks to originate advances based on securities representing whole interests in first mortgage loans, this section enables the Banks to continue to accept privately issued mortgage-backed securities. However, the section precludes acceptance of (i) stripped securities, such as those backed only by the interest payments or the principal payments on such loans, (ii) any security representing a subordinated interest in mortgage loans, or (iii) any security that represents an interest in a residual or other high risk mortgage derivative product. The category for first mortgages on improved residential property includes loans for co-op units secured by the stock in the cooperative.

In addition, this section imposes special eligibility requirements for advances to members that are not qualified thrift lenders. Such members may only receive advances for the purpose of obtaining funds for housing finance. In addition, a member that is not a qualified thrift lender may only receive an advance if it holds stock in its Bank at the time it receives that advance in an amount at least equal to 5% of that member's total advances, divided by that member's actual thrift investment percentage.

The Board, by regulation, must also establish a priority for advances to members who are qualified thrift lenders, and each Bank's advances to members that are not qualified thrift lenders cannot exceed 30% of the Bank's total advances. An exception to the above eligibility requirements is provided for savings banks, a savings association chartered as a savings bank or which acquired its principal assets from an institution chartered as a savings bank prior to October 15, 1982. The section also provides that each member of a Bank must, at a minimum, purchase and maintain stock in that Bank in an amount as if 30% of the member's assets were home mortgage loans.

This section further provides that the Banks may, upon the request of the Director of the OTS make short term liquidity advances to an association that: (1) is solvent but represents a supervisory concern due to its poor financial condition, and (2) has reasonable and demonstrable prospects of returning to a satisfactory financial condition. The section provides that any such advance is subject to all applicable collateral requirements, including those in section 10(a) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1430(a)), as determined by the Board and the Bank, to insure that any such advances are consistent with the principles of prudent lending and that the Bank is not asked to make unsafe or unsound advances. The section also provides that such advances, when made, shall be at an interest rate no less favorable than those made available for similar short-term liquidity advances to associations that do not present such supervisory concerns.

Amendments Relating to Withdrawal From Federal Home Loan Bank Membership

This section amends current section 6(m) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1426(m)) by increasing from five years to ten years the period during which an institution that withdraws from membership in a Bank would be prohibited from rejoining that Bank. Institutions insured by the FSLIC are presently required to maintain membership in their Bank as a condition of their FSLIC insurance. Under the Act, the existing obligation of such agreements remain in effect and institutions would continue to be precluded from terminating their Bank membership as long as they were paying premiums to the Savings Association Insurance Fund. Institutions that withdrew from Federal Home Loan Bank membership prior to the date of enactment may rejoin after 5 years from the date of their withdrawal.

Repeal of Provision Relating to Unlawful Contract Rate

This section repeals section 5 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1425).

Bank Stock and Obligations

This section amends section 23 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1443) relating to Bank stock and obligations.

Thrift Advisory Council

This section repeals section 8a of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1428a) to abolish the Thrift Advisory Council.

Examination of Members

Under this section, the Treasury Department, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, the Office of Thrift Supervision, and the Federal Reserve Banks shall make available to the Banks, upon request by a Bank, in confidence for its use and the use of any other Bank, such reports, records or other information relating to the condition and ownership of any member of a Bank. The Conferees do not intend the Federal Home Loan Banks would needlessly obtain information from these agencies when such information is available from the member or other savings association. These same agencies may also perform, at their discretion, examinations of institutions for the confidential use of the Federal Home Loan Banks.

Liquidity

This section repeals section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1425a).

Community Investment and Affordable Housing Programs

The House bill contained several provisions which established two programs for reinforcing the Federal Home Loan Banks role in supplying mortgage credit and other related assistance for low and moderate income families and neighborhoods through the cash advance system. The Senate agreed to the House provisions with amendments.

The Conferees are aware that a range of forces, including inordinate building and finance costs, shrinking fiscal capacities of governments at all levels and other economic forces have left large numbers of poor and elderly families unable to participate in the national goal of decent, affordable housing and a suitable living environment. Even relatively more affluent families, those just above the lower income housing assistance standards, are increasingly unable to purchase or even to rent housing within their means. The conferees, therefore, have provided the means for assuring that the Federal Home Loan Banks help most critical community investment and affordable housing needs through the utilization of special cash advance programs. The conferees are mindful of the uneven use of similar special advance programs maintained by the Federal Home Loan Banks in the past and the reluctance of some of the banks to actively encourage their member institutions to address critical community investment and affordable housing needs. The conferees wish to make clear that the activities undertaken through the use of these special advances are no less important than any other credit activity undertaken by the banks.

Community Investment Program.—The House bill required each Federal Home Loan Bank to designate a community investment officer to implement the Bank's community lending and affordable housing programs, as well as provide technical assistance and outreach to promote such programs. The bill directed each Bank to establish a program designed to provide funding for member institutions to undertake community-oriented lending for mortgages that lack an established secondary market. Advances under the program would be priced at the Bank's cost of funds plus administrative expenses.

The Conference Report adopts the House provisions with an amendment deleting the requirement that loans under the program be limited to those for which no secondary market is established, requiring instead that loans under the program support community-oriented lending. The Conference Report defines "community-oriented lending" to mean loans for 1) homebuyers whose income does not exceed 115% of area median income, 2) the purchase or rehabilitation of housing occupied by families with incomes not exceeding 115% of area median income, 3) commercial and economic development activities that benefit low- and moderate-income families or are located in low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, and 4) projects that include a combination of these activities. The conferees wish to make clear that among the purposes specified in this provision, the loans should be used for the purpose of providing mortgage financing for qualified projects that would not necessarily meet the customary secondary market standards or for which there is no secondary market. Such financing might involve loans having longer terms than are customary for the secondary market, long-term mortgage loans for small multifamily projects, rehabilitation loans for one to four-family buildings, mortgage loans for mixed use buildings, for buildings that cannot obtain mortgage insurance and loans for community and economic development activities in low and moderate income neighborhoods, especially those activities that will result in employment for low income persons. The conferees expect the HUD Secretary to work with the several secondary market entities to expand existing, or create new, secondary market approaches to provide liquidity for these otherwise non-conforming loans on par with those types of loans that are now purchased by the secondary market. The conferees expect that the Banks will not limit their advance activities to a few projects simply to satisfy the requirements of this section but instead will use their advances on as many projects as is practicable without speading them too thinly.

Affordable Housing Program.—The House bill directed each Bank to establish a program to subsidize interest rates on advances to member institutions that make loans for long-term affordable low- and moderate-income housing at subsidized interest rates. The House bill required each member institution receiving advances under the program to report to the Bank on the use of program advances. The conference report contains the House bill with an amendment that provides standards that limit subsidized advances to (1) loans to finance homeownership purchases or rehabilitation by families with incomes at or below 80% of median; and (2) to finance the purchase, construction or rehabilitation of rental housing in which at least 20% of the units will be occupied by and affordable for very low income households for the remaining useful life of the property or the mortgage term. The conferees expect that the Board will encourage the use of the longest practicable mortgage term in order to aid in making the housing affordable by very low income families.

Priority.—The House bill required each Bank to give priority for advances for loans for 1) the purchase, rehabilitation or construction of multifamily housing where 40% of the units would be occupied by low- or middle-income households for at least 30 years, 2) the purchase or rehabilitation of housing held by the federal government, and 3) housing sponsored by any nonprofit organization, any State or political subdivision of any State, any local housing authority or State housing finance agency.

The conference report contains the House bill with an amendment which provides that priority will be given to loans for rental or homeownership purposes such as the following: 1) homeownership for families whose income is 80% of the area median income or less, 2) the purchase or rehabilitation of housing owned or held by the federal government, and 3) the purchase or rehabilitation of housing sponsored by nonprofit organizations, State and local governments, local housing authorities and State housing finance agencies. The conferees wish to make clear that the Board is expected to take steps to assure that the preponderance of funds provided herein be utilized in behalf of families having income of 80% or below the area median. Also, these priorities are intended to assure that both multifamily rental as well as homeownership activities receive substantial portions of total funds utilized.

Contributions.—The House bill required each Bank to contribute to its affordable housing program 5% of its net income during calendar years 1990 through 1993, 6% for calendar year 1994, 10% for 1995 and each subsequent year. The bill required annual aggregate contributions to be at least $75 million through 1993, $90 million in 1994, and $150 million in 1995 and subsequent years. The conference report contains the House language with an amendment lowering the minimums to $50 million in 1990 through 1993, $75 million in 1994, and $100 million in 1995 and subsequent years. The percentage contribution for any given year shall be based on the net income of the preceding year.

If a Bank finds that these sums are contributing to its financial instability, it may apply to the Federal Housing Board for a temporary suspension. In determining financial instability, the Board must consider such factors as whether the Bank's earnings are severely depressed, whether there has been a substantial decline in membership capital, and whether there has been a substantial reduction in outstanding advances.

Any suspension is to be temporary and the Board is required to monitor the Bank's financial condition during a suspension. Suspensions shall not be granted where a Bank's earnings decline because of a change not justified by market conditions in the terms on which it makes advances to members, inordinate operating and administrative expenses, or mismanagement. The Board shall review applications for suspension and any supporting financial data and provide approval or disapproval in writing with specific findings and reasons for its action. The suspension shall take place 60 days after notice is provided to the House and Senate Banking Committees unless a joint resolution is enacted to disapprove the suspension.

Reserve Fund.—The House bill required Banks that fail to use or commit the full amount of the required annual contribution to place the excess above 10% of the unutilized amount in an Affordable Housing Reserve Fund to be administered by the Federal Housing Finance Board. Unused or uncommitted amounts were to be fully used or committed in the following year. The Board should provide these reserve funds to any Bank to meet additional eligible affordable housing needs in the Bank's district. The Board is required to establish regulations for any monies remaining in the Reserve Fund. The conference report contains the House provision.

The conferees have also provided that the Federal Housing Finance Board must promulgate regulations to implement the affordable housing program. The regulations are intended to ensure that the program operates in a manner that serves the affordable housing needs of low- and moderate-income households. The conferees also intend that, by establishing some overarching uniformity of program priorities, procedures, and standards, these regulations will minimize the potential for fraud and abuse that might otherwise exist if the Banks were left with unfettered discretion to conduct the affordable housing program.

Other Programs.—The House bill provided that the Community Investment and Affordable Housing Programs do not preclude Banks from establishing other community investment cash advance programs or contributing additional funds to the Affordable Housing Reserve Fund. The conference report contains the House provision.

Advisory Council.—The House bill directed each Bank to appoint an Advisory Council consisting of 7 to 15 persons from community and nonprofit organizations actively involved in providing or promoting low- and moderate-income housing in the Bank's district. The bill instructed the Advisory Council to meet quarterly with representatives of the Bank's board of directors to advise the Bank on low- and moderate-income housing programs and needs in the Bank's district and on the use of cash advances for such purposes. Each Advisory Council is required to submit to the Federal Housing Finance Board at least annually its analysis of the low-income housing activity of the Bank which appointed it. The conference report contains the House provision.

Reports to Congress.—The House bill directed the Board to monitor and submit an annual report to Congress and each Advisory Council on the Banks' support of low-income housing and community development and the Banks' use of advances for these purposes. The bill required the Board to include the Advisory Council's reports in the Board's report to Congress. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment requiring the Comptroller General to audit and evaluate the Program after two years and report to Congress its conclusions and recommendations.

Definitions.—The House bill included the following definitions: low- or moderate-income household—any household whose income is 80% of the area median income or less; low- or moderate-income neighborhood—any neighborhood in which 51% or more of the households are low- or moderate-income households; and affordable rental housing—any housing in which low- or moderate-income households are not required to pay more than 30% of the monthly adjusted household income for rent.

The conference report contains the House provisions with an amendment adding a definition of very low income household as any household that has an income of 50% or less of the area median income, and further providing that the term "affordable for very low income households" means housing in which the unit rent does not exceed 30% of a family's adjusted income which income equals 50% of the median income of the area with adjustments for family size. This is to conform the definition of very low income households with that required for tax-credit purposes.

Transferred Employees of Federal Home Loan Banks and Joint Offices

The purpose of this section is to equitably address the transfer of employees of the Federal Home Loan Banks (Banks), or joint offices of such Banks, performing supervisory and examination functions and credit allocation functions to the Office of Thrift Supervision and the Federal Housing Finance Board, respectively.

Under this section, each employee of a Bank, or a joint office of such banks, identified under section 403 of this Act for transfer must be transferred to the OTS or the Board for employment no later than 60 days after the date of enactment, and must receive notice of the position assignment no later than 120 days after the effective date of that transfer. These two employee rights parallel those provided for transferred employees of the Bank Board and the FSLIC. Also, like Bank Board and FSLIC employees, each employee of a Bank, or joint office of such Banks, transferred is guaranteed a position at that agency with the same status and tenure as held by that employee prior to the transfer. Also, like transferred Bank Board and FSLIC employees, transferred Bank employees cannot be involuntarily separated or reduced in grade or compensation for a year, except for cause. Where necessary or appropriate to further safety and soundness, the Director of the OTS may continue the pre-transfer compensation of any transferring employee for up to two additional years.

Because of the special circumstances involving the transfer of such employees to the OTS or the Board, an employee may be transferred to the OTS or the Board even if that employee would otherwise be ineligible for employment by the United States because of his or her citizenship.

This section also provides that personnel transferred to the OTS or the Board are entitled to receive, during the one-year period immediately following the transfer, pay and benefits similar to those received by that employee immediately prior to the transfer. However, the pay and benefits received by each such employee during this one-year period are subject to the comparability provisions of this Act. Therefore, each employee would be compensated by his or her new agency at a level which is comparable to other employees of similar status and tenure at the OTS or the Board. To the extent, however, that the transferred employee suffers a reduction of pay or benefits as a result of the comparability provisions during the one-year period, that employee will be compensated for the differential by the particular Bank, or joint office of such Banks, from which that employee was transferred. The obligation of the Banks to compensate former employees for any such differential, however, shall only apply during this initial one-year period. The term "benefits" for purposes of this section means primary benefits such as health insurance coverage and life insurance coverage.

The conferees are concerned that the transfer of supervisory and examination employees from the Banks not adversely affect the integrity of the thrift regulatory system. In particular, the conferees are concerned that the primary legislative goals of resolving the current crisis and ensuring the future safe and sound operation of the thrift industry not be compromised by the loss of necessary staff, especially the most senior and experienced employees whose continued participation in the regulatory process is essential to the achievement of these goals. Therefore, the conferees have agreed that the Director of OTS may extend, on a case by case basis, the existing levels of compensation and benefits for employees transferring to OTS from the Banks for two years beyond the initial one year period guaranteed to all transferring employees. If the OTS Director determines to continue the pre-transfer compensation for any employee for up to two years beyond the initial one-year period, the compensation of that employee will not be subject to the comparability restriction during that additional period.

Further, the conferees are aware that some of the most valuable regulatory professionals being transferred are presently federal annuitants that would be financially harmed by the return to federal employee status. Therefore, the conferees have provided for the retention of these employees by giving the Director of OTS the flexibility to avoid statutory penalties that would apply to these employees due to their federal annuitant status. An annuitant who accepts reemployment shall not be subject to the deduction from pay required by 5 U.S.C. § 8344 or 8468.

The level of comparable pay and benefits under this section is not determined solely at the time of the transfer, but may change during the year as salary and benefits at the new agency change during that year. Therefore, the resulting compensation from the particular Bank, or joint office of such Banks, may also vary during that year. The provision of Title VII only applies to a transferred employee while that employee remains with the agency to which that employee is transferred. As a result, if an employee transferred to the OTS or the Board leaves that agency, the Bank from which that employee transferred would no longer be obligated to provide any compensation for that employee under this Act.

Subsection (e) provides that if the health insurance program of a transferred employee is not continued by the agency to which that employee is transferred, the employee is entitled to health insurance coverage notwithstanding health conditions pre-existing at the time of election or enrollment into the alternate pre-existing at the time of election or enrollment into the alternate health insurance program of the agency. Again, because of the special nature of the transfer of such employees to the OTS or the Board, the Committee determined that it would be inappropriate to exclude a transferred employee (or a family member of such an employee) from the new health insurance program because of a health condition which did not preclude that individual's participation in an existing health insurance program, but would otherwise have precluded enrollment into the alternate insurance program of the new agency.

For similar reasons, the Act directs the Director of the OTS or the Chairman of the Board to take such action as is necessary on a case-by-case basis so that employees transferring under this section receive equitable treatment regarding credit for service with a Federal entity or instrumentality, or with a Bank or joint office of such Banks, with respect to his or her retirement accounts, and accrued annual leave or vacation time, in recognition of the supervisory service of such transferring employees.

Transitional Provisions

The purpose of this section is to provide supplemental funding for the supervisory and examination functions, facilities and support services transferred from the Banks, or joint offices of such banks to the new Office of Thrift Supervision during the transitional period immediately following enactment.

Under subsection (a), the Banks continue to pay their current proportionate share of the administrative expenses of operating the regulatory and insurance functions of the Bank Board and the FSLIC until those functions are transferred to the Office of Thrift Supervision, the FDIC, or the Resolution Trust Corporation under this Act. After these functions are transferred, the Banks continue to pay a comparable share of such administrative expenses for the transferred functions until December 31, 1989. All administrative expenses payable by the Banks shall be reduced by the amount of any examination fees and assessments for this period received by the Banks, the Bank Board or the FSLIC before the transfer, or by the Banks or the successor agencies after the transfer of functions under this Act. The expenses payable by the Banks shall also be reduced by the amount of any unexpended funds paid by the Banks to the Bank Board or the FSLIC, or to a joint office of the Banks the functions of which have been transferred to the OTS.

In addition, under subsection (b), the Banks continue to pay the applicable salary of employees of the Banks, or joint offices of such Banks, performing supervisory and examination functions after such functions and employees are transferred to the OTS. Like payments for Bank Board expenses, these payments by the Banks would also be reduced by the allocable amount of the examination fees and assessments received in connection with the activities of these employees. The payment for each transferred employee is to be made by the particular Bank, or joint office of such Banks, from which that employee is transferred. The obligation of the Banks to pay the salaries of these transferred supervisory and examination personnel continues until the later of: (1) 120 days after the transfer of such supervisory and examination functions to the OTS, or (2) March 31, 1990. The subsection also makes it clear that the payment of this compensation by the Banks is in lieu of, and not in addition to, the payment of such compensation by the OTS.

Under subsection (c), the Banks also continue to provide to the OTS, until December 31, 1990, for supervisory and examination functions transferred from the Banks, or joint offices of such Banks, facilities and support services comparable to those presently provided for the employees of the Banks, or joint offices of such Banks, performing those supervisory and examination functions. This provision relates to the facilities and support services that are provided by the Banks themselves, as opposed to those obtained from third parties. For example, the Banks must continue to provide office space, furniture and equipment, computer, personnel and other similar support services with respect to the transferred employees until December 31, 1990. With respect to supervisory and examination functions performed by employees of individual Banks, the section makes it clear that the Bank is only required to provide the facilities and support services for as long as, and to the extent that, the functions continue to be performed in that Bank's offices. For example, the OTS cannot move a particular function from the offices of a Bank to another location and then request payment of the rent or other expenses of that new location.

With respect to other transitional matters, subsection (d) provides that the senior supervisory official in each Bank district (other than the Bank president) remains the Principal Supervisory Agent for that district until the Director of the OTS provides otherwise. The Director has the ability to name a new Principal Supervisory Agent for any district at any time. Also, the supervisory and examination personnel located in each Bank district continue to be responsible for the supervision and examination of savings associations in that district until the Director of the OTS provides otherwise.

Federal Home Loan Bank Reserves

Under this section, the Board of Directors of each Bank may determine the reserve account to be maintained from time to time by such Bank. The section also specifies when dividends may be paid by a Bank, and provides that the dividends paid by each Bank must be approved by the Federal Housing Finance Board.

Special Account

This section specifically directs that all monies and funds remaining in the special deposit account of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, or other accounts of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board at the time of the dissolution of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board shall become the property of the Federal Housing Finance Board.

Conforming Amendments

This section contains several provisions making miscellaneous conforming amendments to the Federal Home Loan Bank Act or other laws relating to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board or the FSLIC.

Manufactured Housing

Throughout the conference report, there are various provisions specifically relating to housing. The Qualified Thrift Lender test, Capital Standards, home financing offered by the RTC, community support requirements, and the affordable housing program are all housing-related elements of the bill. The conferees believe manufactured housing constitutes a viable source of affordable housing. Therefore, the conferees believe that manufactured housing, for the purpose of this Bill, should be treated similar to site-built housing. For the purposes of this Bill, whenever the term "home" "single-family residence", or other reference to housing is used, it is intended to include a manufactured home as defined in the National Manufactured Home Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974, as amended. This does not include recreational vehicles, travel trailers, campers, or other types of temporary shelter designed to be moved frequently.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION

The House bill and the Senate amendment contained similar provisions relating to the restructuring of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (FHLMC) and the regulatory standards under which FHLMC would operate. In addition, the House bill and the Senate amendment made a number of technical and conforming amendments to the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) Charter Act.

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment that set forth in the statement of purpose for both the FHLMC and FNMA that these two corporations would provide ongoing assistance in the secondary mortgage market to mortgages securing housing for low and moderate income families. The conferees wish to reaffirm FHLMC and FNMA's commitment to assit the housing needs of low and moderate income households by reaffirming in the statement of purposes that their mission to address the housing needs of low and moderate income people is important to their public purpose.

In restructuring the corporate operations of FHLMC the basic purpose of the changes embodied in this legislation is to ensure that FHLMC's existing mortgage purchase and securities sales activities will continue without interruption. FHLMC therefore will not be required to obtain either programmatic or rate and maturity approvals from the Secretary of the Treasury for any future sales of mortgage-related securities which are of the same type as mortgage-related securities which FHLMC has issued or is issuing as of the effective date of this Act.

In addition, this Act will require the initial election of FHLMC directors to occur within six months. The conferees do not intend this requirement to preclude FHLMC from following the typical corporate practice of holding director elections in the spring, following distribution of year-end financial information. Therefore, to the extent necessary to follow typical practice, the initial terms for the directors of FHLMC may exceed one year.

In providing for an interim Board of Directors, the conferees have provided that the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board have authority to designate persons to fulfill their responsibilities as members of the FHLMC's interim Board of Directors. The conferees believe that stability and continuity on the interim Board is essential. Therefore, if the Secretary or the Chairman is unable to serve as a director, the designee should be a person who is expected to serve for the entire term of an interim member. The designee will not be able to subdesignate his responsibility to discharge the functions of a director.

The Conference Report provides that the FHLMC is authorized to conduct its business without regard to any qualification or similar statute in any State. Accordingly, the FHLMC can conduct its activities without compliance with State laws such as doing business and Blue Sky laws. This amendment does not apply to any assertion of priority by the FHLMC with respect to any cause of action or claim filed prior to the effective date of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989. Any cause of action or claim filed prior to such effective date which is subsequently refiled or amended due to the dismissal of the case or some other legal action shall be treated for purposes of the application of this amendment as if it were filed prior to the effective date of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989.

The Conference Report authorizes FHLMC to have voting common stock on such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors may prescribe. This authorization, including the authority to impose limitations on concentration of ownership, applies to both new issuances of common stock and to the senior participating preferred stock converted into common stock by the FIRRE Act.

Also contained in this part of the Conference Report are various technical conforming amendments, including an amendment to assure that the existing method for determining increases in the balance of conventional loans eligible for purchase under the charters of the FNMA and FHLMC will continue without change, conducted for both FNMA and FHLMC by the Board's successor regarding this responsibility, the new Federal Housing Finance Board.

GAO AUDIT OF THE FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment that would provide that the financial transactions of the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) would be subject to an audit by the GAO. The Conference Report contains a House provision with an amendment to provide for a GAO audit of the mortgage transactions of FNMA.

TITLE VIII. BANK CONSERVATION ACT AMENDMENTS

Title VIII grants to the Comptroller of the Currency more clearly articulated powers to appoint a conservator for a national bank or any other depository institution chartered or licensed under Federal law and subject to the Comptroller's supervision.

Title VIII resembles in many respects the provision of Title III of the conference report that amend the Home Owners' Loan Act to grant the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision's power to appoint a conservator for a Federal or State savings association.

TITLE IX. REGULATORY ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY AND CRIMINAL ENHANCEMENTS

PERSON SUBJECT TO ENFORCEMENT

Section 901 substitutes the new term "institution-affiliated party" for the many variations of the terms "director", "officer", "employee", "agent", and "other person participating in the affairs of an institution" currently found throughout section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDIA) and section 206 of the Federal Credit Union Act (FCUA). The new term, which is defined in section 3 of the FDIC as amended, makes uniform the scope of Federal banking agency enforcement and broadens the group of individuals and entities covered. In addition, the term "bank" in the FDIA is replaced by "depository institution" so that the enforcement provisions will be applicable to savings associations as well as banks. Parallel changes are made to the Federal Credit Union Act by all applicable sections of Title IX.

ORDERS TO CEASE AND DESIST

Section 902 clarifies the authority of the agencies to order restitution or reimbursement in a cease and desist order (C&D). It specifies that a C&D order may include restrictions of specific activities of a financial institution or its employees. It also provides that an agency can issue temporary corrective C&D orders whenever an institution's records are so incomplete or inaccurate that the regulatory agency is not able to determine the institution's financial condition. It contains a provision allowing the regulators to issue a temporary C&D that may restrict growth in an institution. The section changes the regulators' burden of proof for obtaining a temporary C&D from a showing of "substantial" dissipation of assets to a showing of a "significant" dissipation of assets. In making this change, the Conferees intend (1) that the term "significant" lower the agencies' burden of proof from the term "substantial"; and (2) that "significant" cover anything more than a minimal or nominal dissipation of assets. The Conferees further intend that an individual who dissipates the assets of an institution cannot circumvent this provision by making the institution whole for the losses that the individual caused by such dissipation. Finally the section makes explicit the applicability of section 8 of the FDIA to savings and loan holding companies, their subsidiaries, and their affiliates.

Removal Orders

Section 903 unifies the removal provisions used by the regulators and allows the regulatory agencies to proceed with a removal or prohibition action when an institution has been harmed or the interests of the depositors have been prejudiced without requiring the agencies to quantify the harm or prejudice.

Industry-wide Removal Orders

Section 904 provides that any removed institution-affiliated party may seek consent to commence or resume any affiliation otherwise prohibited. The Conferees intend that the agencies closely scrutinize any request and review the persons's activity from the time the original order was issued. The Conferees intend that consent should be given only when there is no doubt that such an approval is justified by the complete rehabilitation of an individual. All approvals have to be made public by the agencies.

Enforcement After Separation

Section 905 authorizes the banking agencies to take enforcement actions against culpable institution-affiliated parties who resign or otherwise depart from an institution, within 6 years of their leaving the institution. This section does not create a new offense; it is procedural in nature, and can therefore be applied retroactively to yet undiscovered misconduct and to currently pending supervisory matters that have been stayed awaiting congressional action. For example, assuming that the legislation is enacted on August 26, 1989, a banking agency could initiate and pursue enforcement against any institution-affiliated party who departed an institution in the previous six years dating back to August 26, 1983.

Removal for State Criminal Proceedings

Section 906 expands present law to include State criminal charges as a ground for removal. The term "nolo contendere" was deleted because such a plea results in a judgment of conviction.

Civil Money Penalties

This section increases the maximum amount for civil money penalties ("CMPs"); expands the grounds for imposing them; provides for judicial review under the Administrative Procedure Act; and authorizes the banking agencies to take action to collect CMPs. It creates three tiers of civil penalties, based on the seriousness of the misconduct. By greatly expanding the scope of misconduct covered by the civil penalty provisions and by making substantial increases to the penalty amounts, the Conferees intend for the Federal banking agencies to aggressively utilize this new authority, whenever it is justified in law and by the facts.

Criminal Penalty for Violation of a Removal

Section 908 increases the criminal penalty for participation in the affairs of a depository institution, a credit union, or a farm credit system bank in violation of a removal order to a maximum of $1 million and the imprisonment to a maximum of five years. An express civil penalty for violations of this section was deleted because the Conferees intend that the general civil money penalty provisions of the FDIA and the FCUA apply.

Supervisory Records

Section 909 requires that the Federal banking agencies make available to the FDIC, in its capacity as a receiver of a closed financial institution, all supervisory records pertaining to that institution. The Conferees intend for all privileges to transfer with the documents and remain applicable. A transfer does not constitute a waiver of any governmental agency, work product, attorney-client, or other privilege recognized by the courts or by statute.

Criminal Penalty for Participation by a Criminal

Section 910 broadens the prohibition against participation in the affairs of insured depository institutions by persons who have been convicted of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or breach of trust. The level of intent needed for conviction is changed from "willful" to "knowing" and the penalty applies to both financial institutions and indivduals. The maximum criminal penalty is increased to five years imprisonment and $1 million per day fine.

Reports

Under this section, civil money penalties may be imposed both for (1) failure to file or the late filing of call reports and other information and (2) filing any false or misleading reports or information. This provision, like section 907, creates three tiers of penalties based on the seriousness of the misconduct. The lowest penalty is to be imposed only for inadvertent and unintentional errors, but only if there were procedures in place to reasonably avoid such errors, and if the insured institution can prove the inadvertency of the error. Otherwise the higher penalty standards must be imposed. The Conferees intend that a legal judgment with respect to a person's obligations under this section should never be considered an inadvertent error. The respondent in all civil penalty proceedings is entitled to a hearing to challenge such assessment.

FDIC Backup Enforcement Authority for Thrifts

Under this provision, the FDIC may request that the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision ("OTS") take a particular enforcement action concerning any savings association. If the Director does not take such action within 60 days, the FDIC Board may authorize FDIC to take the action itself. In extreme situations, as defined by the agencies, the FDIC would not have to wait 60 days.

The regional offices of the OTS must submit all requests for formal investigations or enforcement actions to the FDIC at the same time such requests are submitted to the Director of the OTS. The Conferees intend that the regional offices of the OTS submit only copies of reports of examination and summaries of requests for enforcement action to comply with this requirement. In addition, the Director of the OTS must provide semiannual reports to the FDIC on the status and disposition of such requests, including reasons for disappoval or approval decisions.

Public Disclosure of Enforcement Actions

Section 913 requires publication of formal enforcement orders, modification of such orders, or termination of such orders by the depository institutions regulatory agencies. Publication required by this provision could be delayed for a reasonable time of public disclosure would seriously threaten the safety or soundness of a financial institution.

Agency Disapproval of Directors and Executive Officers

Troubled financial institutions (and their holding companies), newly chartered institutions (within 2 years), and those which have undergone a change in control (also within 2 years) would have to give 30 days notice to their primary Federal regulatory agency before appointing senior executive officers or directors. The banking agencies would then be able to disapprove, within this 30 day period, such appointments. The agencies must prescribe by regulation those extraordinary circumstances under which the prior notice requirement could be waived, allowing directors to be appointed or senior management to be employed quickly. (The agencies would still have 30 days to disapprove such additions or employments.) In addition, the agencies would define by regulation the terms "troubled" and "senior executive officers". The Conferees intend the following: First, the agencies should not define these terms too narrowly. Second, the banking agencies should consult among themselves before issuing regulations under this section. Third, an agency's decision under section 914 not to disapprove appointment of a senior executive officer of a director not prejudice the agency's ability to take any later enforcement action (including removal action), if such becomes warranted.

NCUA Investigative Authority

Section 915 clarifies the NCUA's authority to monitor and investigate instances where the NCUA suspects noncompliance with its statutes or regulations during or outside of the normal examination process. It also clarifies the NCUA's authority to conduct thorough investigations in determining claims on insured accounts. The Conferees intend for the NCUA to exercise powers similar to the FDIC in such matters.

Improved Administrative Hearings and Procedures

Section 916 requires the Federal banking agencies to jointly establish their own pool of administrative law judges and to develop a set of uniform rules and procedures within 24 months. The Conferees intend for the agencies to improve and expedite administrative proceedings through these new procedures.

Task Force Study of Delegation of Enforcement Actions

Section 917 mandates an interagency task force study of the desirablity and feasibility of the additional delegation of investigation and enforcement authority to the regional offices of the banking agencies. The task force's recommendations and the responses of the heads of the banking agencies must be reported to Congress by September 30, 1990.

Annual Reports to Congress

Section 918 requires the Federal banking agencies and the Attorney General to report annually to Congress on enforcement actions. The Conferees intend that the data required under clause (a)(1) be provided for the following subcategories for each type of informal and formal supervisory, administrative and civil enforcement action: insured institutions, holding companies and subsidiaries (if appropriate), and institution-affiliated parties (broken down for independent contractors, consultants, and agents).

The Conferees intend that each report required under subsection (a)(4) contain comments on any concerns about the Justice Department's handling of these matters, including inadequate responses, unnecessary delays, or other problems.

The Conferees intend that each report required under subsection (a)(5) break down the data on investigations, prosecutions, and convictions (or other dispositions), particularly by seriousness of the offense and also by categories of sources of the information which gave rise to the investigation. For example, the FBI presently provides data on numbers of financial institution fraud and embezzlement investigations, broken down by the dollar loss category (such as $100,000 plus cases, and $250,000 plus cases). The Conferees expect the Justice Department to provide data under these or similar subcategories and to indicate the numbers of referrals from each of the banking agencies. The Conferees also intend that the Department of Justice comment on the quality of agency referrals and on the assistance provided by agency staff.

Credit Union Audit Requirement

Section 919 requires the NCUA, within 120 days after enactment, to prescribe audit standards requiring any insured credit union to be audited by an independent certified accountant for any fiscal year in which the credit union: (1) has not conducted an annual supervisory committee audit; (2) has not received a complete and satisfactory supervisory committee audit; or (3) has had persistent and serious recordkeeping deficiencies. The failure of a credit union to obtain required audits will constitute an unsafe and unsound practice.

Technical Amendments to Administrative Process

Section 920 makes the provisions of 8(h) relating to administrative hearings and judicial review applicable to all agency actions under section 8 of the FDIA, except removals of persons charged with a crime involving dishonesty or breach of trust under section 8(g) of the FDIA. The section also eliminates an inconsistent definition of "order which has become final" from the FDIA. The Conferees intend for enforcement orders against insured depository institutions and institution-affiliated parties to be final once the agency has completed its administrative action (or immediately upon consent). The definition was deleted from section 8(k) to remove the contradiction with section 8(h)(3), which remains operative. Under section 8(h)(3), judicial review of an agency's enforcement order stays the effectiveness of the order only if the court specifically orders such a stay.

Deletion of Section 920 of H.R. 1278

Section 920 of the House bill was deleted because the Conferees believe that it is unnecessary. The provisions of the Federal Tort Claims Act already provide immunity for banking agency employees while exercising their official duties. The Conferees believe that the activities specified in the House bill are part of an employee's official duties and are therefore covered by the Federal Tort Claims Act. Accordingly, neither the original inclusion nor the later deletion of the House provision is intended to diminish in any way the existing immunities of bank regulatory officials and employees.

Termination of Deposit Insurance

Section 926 shortens the period for agency notice from 120 days to 30 days. This period can be eliminated by the FDIC with the approval of the primary regulator.

The provisions regarding lack of notice that are set forth in subsection 8(G) apply only in the case of a temporary suspension of insurance. The Conferees do not intend clause (ii) of 8(G) to apply, for example, when a person chooses not to collect or read mail (as in the case of a person who refuses to accept the delivery of a certified letter). The Conferees hope that the FDIC will consider the special circumstances of unsophisticated depositors when acting under this section. Insured deposits of each depositor remain insured, less all subsequent withdrawals, for at least six months or up to two years with the approval of the Board.

Submission of Information to Auditors

Section 931 mandates that all Federally insured financial institutions furnish their external auditors with copies of their most recent call reports, State or Federal reports of examination, and all ongoing and final civil enforcement or other supervisory actions issued by Federal or State banking agencies.

Depository Institution Employee Protection

This section creates a new cause of action for financial institution employees who are fired because they provide information about alleged violations to a banking agency or to the Justice Department. Persons who cause the misconduct or who knowingly or recklessly provide substantially false information will not be able to pursue such actions. The Conferees deleted the provision in the House bill which awarded attorneys' fees to defendant financial institutions for those lawsuits brought in bad faith under this section. The removal of this provision should in no way be construed as supporting frivolous lawsuits brought in bad faith by discharged employees. Rather, the Conferees believe that deterrence of such lawsuits can most effectively be accomplished through imposition of sanctions under existing provisions in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Accordingly, the Conferees expect the Federal courts to aggressively apply sanctions under Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Rewards for Providing Information

Section 933 gives the Federal banking agencies the ability to pay a reward for information which leads to a recovery of a criminal fine, restitution, a civil penalty under the banking statutes or under one of the applicable criminal provisions, or a forfeiture, if the amount of recovery exceeds $50,000. The maximum reward cannot exceed the lessor of 25% of the fine, penalty, restitution, or forfeiture or $100,000.

Definitions

Section 941 expands the list of financial regulators exempted from the Right to Financial Privacy Act to include agencies that supervise the activities of financial institution holding companies and any subsidiary of a financial institution or a financial institution holding company.

Additional Exceptions

Section 942 adds additional exceptions to the Right to Financial Privacy Act to make clear that information relevant to conservatorship or receivership functions concerning failed institutions can be provided to Federal deposit insurance agencies by the banking agencies or law enforcement authorities. It creates similar exceptions for disclosure to and examination by agencies and other entities.

Prohibition

Section 943 prohibits a financial institution from notifying any person that a grand jury has subpoenaed a customer's records in connection with a possible violation of certain financial institution related criminal provisions. Violation of the prohibition can result in a civil enforcement action by the regulatory agencies.

Miscellaneous Provisions

Section 944 includes the SEC as one of the agencies which may share information under Right to Financial Privacy Act exceptions.

Civil Penalties

Section 951 authorizes the Attorney General to bring a civil action to recover a civil penalty for conduct that violates any of 10 banking-related offenses in title 18 of the United States Code. The Attorney General must establish the right to recover the civil penalty by a preponderance of the evidence. Section 951 also authorizes the Attorney General, during a civil investigation of such offenses, to issue subpoenas to summon witnesses and require the production of documents. Once the civil action has begun, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure would govern the action. The recipient of the subpoena can contest the subpoena in court, and if the recipient does not respond to the subpoena, the Attorney General can get a court order compelling the recipient to respond. The recipient's failure to respond to the court order is punishable as contempt of court.

Increased Criminal Penalties

Section 961 increases to 20 years the maximum prison term for 10 banking-related offenses in title 18 of the United States Code. Section 961 also increases the statute of limitation period for those 10 offenses from 5 to 10 years. Finally, section 961 requires, for those 10 offenses, that the United States Sentencing Commission promulgate sentencing guidelines that "provide for a substantial period of incarceration" if the particular offense "substantially jeopardizes the safety and soundness of a Federally insured financial institution."

This direction will require the Sentencing Commission, for the sentencing guidelines applicable to the 10 offenses covered, to promulgate amendments to those guidelines that add a specific offense characteristic that calls for an increase in the base offense level if the offense "substantially jeopardizes the safety and soundness of a Federally insured financial institution." The result of such a specific offense characteristic will be to increase the final offense level. An increase in the final offense level results in the applicable guideline sentencing range being greater.

Miscellaneous Revisions to Title 18

Section 962 of the Conference Report amends the obstruction of justice offense (section 1510 of title 18, United States Code) to prohibit an officer, director, partner, or employee of, or an agent or attorney for, a financial institution to disclose the existence or contents of certain grand jury subpoenas for bank records. The grand jury subpoenas covered are those issued in connection with an investigation of a possible violation of 10 banking-related offenses in title 18. The maximum prison term is 5 years if the disclosure is made to any person with the specific intent to obstruct a judicial proceeding, including a grand jury proceeding and one year if the disclosure is made to a customer of the financial institution whose records are sought by the subpoena or any to other person named in the subpoena, including targets of the investigation specifically so named.

The House bill uses "knowingly notifies". The Senate bill uses "notifies", but the courts ordinarily would require "knowingly" as the culpability for the offense as set forth in the Senate bill. See H.R. Rep. No. 1396, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 35 (1980). The provision agreed to by the Conferees does not use "knowingly" in subsection (b)(1) because that subsection requires a specific intent, and therefore requires a knowing notification. The provision agreed to by the Conferees does not use "knowingly" in subsection (b)(2) because that is the standard the courts will require, since another standard is not specified. See id. Further, the Conferees understand and intend that "knowingly" incorporates the concept of "willful blindness". See id. at 35-36.

Civil and Criminal Forfeiture

Section 963(a) provides for civil forfeiture in connection with 8 banking-related offenses in title 18, United States Code. Section 963(b) authorizes criminal forfeiture upon conviction of any of 10 banking-related offenses in title 18 (or a conspiracy to commit any of those 10 offenses).

Grand Jury Secrecy

Section 964(a) amends title 18, United States Code, to permit the disclosure of grand jury information concerning a banking law violation in certain circumstances. First, such information can be disclosed, without a court order, to an attorney for the government, but only for use (1) in enforcing a civil penalty authorized in section 951 of the legislation or (2) in connection with a civil forfeiture proceeding under section 981 of title 18 when the property involved constitutes or is traceable to a violation of any of 10 banking-related offenses in title 18. Second, such information can be disclosed to personnel of a federal agency regulating financial institutions for use in relation to any matter within that agency's jurisdiction, if a court finds that there is a "substantial need" for the disclosure.

The term "substantial need" is explained in the section-by-section analysis of the Senate bill as follows: "Under the substantial need standard, a court could consider a number of factors. . . . In weighing these considerations . . . a court would not be able to deny disclosure merely because the agency for whom disclosure is sought may have alternative discovery tools available to it. On the other hand, the 'substantial need' test does not contemplate that a court would become simply a 'rubber stamp' for the government's request for disclosure. Review under this standard should require a Justice Department attorney to make more than a showing of mere convenience or simple relevance to matters within the jurisdiction of the agency." 135 Cong. Rec. page 3803 (daily ed. Mar. 8, 1989).

Section 964(c) amends the Fair Credit Reporting Act to provide specifically that a credit reporting agency must furnish consumer credit report records when served with a grand jury subpoena for those records.

Criminal Division Fraud Section Office

Section 965 requires the Attorney General to establish a regional office of the Criminal Division's fraud section in the Northern District of Texas. The GAO is also directed to report to Congress on whether additional regional offices should be established. The Conferees intend that the Criminal Division substantially reduce the numbers of fraud section attorneys travelling from Washington, D.C. to Dallas by transferring some senior or supervisory personnel to Dallas and by hiring additional attorneys to work in Dallas. The Justice Department has tentatively planned to hire approximately 24 attorneys for the fraud section with the additional appropriation authorized by this legislation. The Conferees intend that the Department hire a number of these attorneys expressly for the Dallas regional office.

Department of Justice Appropriation

Section 966(a) authorizes for the Department of Justice, for each of the next three fiscal years, $65 million per year for investigations and prosecutions of banking crimes and $10 million per year for civil proceedings involving financial institutions. Section 966(b) precludes supplantation and reallocation of the funds authorized.

Judiciary Appropriation

Section 967 authorizes, for each of the next three fiscal years, $10 million for the Federal judiciary, in anticipation of an increase in the number of financial institution cases litigated in the Federal courts.

Amendment to RICO Statute

Section 968 amends section 1961 of title 18, United States Code, to add a new predicate offense—violation of section 1344 of title 18 (financial institution fraud)—to the definition of the term "racketeering activity", a term used in the RICO chapter of title 18.

Provisions of Senate and House Bills Modified or Deleted

The modification or deletion of any provions in either the House or Senate bills, in this or any other title, regarding the litigation authority of the Justice Department or any federal financial institution regulatory or insurance agency is not intended to, and does not, affect any litigation authority possessed by the Justice Department or any federal financial institution regulatory or insurance agency.

TITLE X. STUDIES OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE, BANKING SERVICES, AND THE SAFETY AND SOUNDNESS OF GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES

Title X is devoted to studies and reports. The bill contains a number of reports, studies, and audits, many of them contained in other titles of the bill. Those that are directed to Congress are all summarized here, however, as a * * * While concern for the cost of the large number of reports was voiced during the Conference, members felt that expenditure is warranted on studies to enhance the safety and soundness of the financial system. Such studies should reduce the probability of future problems in the financial sector that would necessitate Federal outlays. Other studies are included in the report in order to further certain social objectives.

PERIODIC REPORTS AND AUDITS

The Insurance Funds

Title II Requires the FDIC to report annually to Congress on its operations, the condition of the BIF, SAIF, and FSLIC Resolution Fund, the projected needs of these funds, their response to changes in the economic environment, and any findings or recommendation for legislative or administrative action. The FDIC will also report quarterly to Congress, the Treasury Department and OMB on the recent and forecast condition of the insurance funds.

Within 60 days of enactment, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board must submit a final accounting of FSLIC finances and operations to Treasury, OMB and Congress (Title IV).

Regulatory Oversight

The Office of Thrift Supervision (Title III), the Resolution Trust Corporation (Title V), and the Federal Housing Finance Board (Title VII), Resolution Funding Corporation (Title V), shall each submit an annual report to Congress.

The RTC must also send a semi-annual report to Congress each April and October on its financial condition, the progress it is making in resolving thrifts in receivership or conservatorship, its remaining exposure to failed and failing institutions, its asset-manaagement activities, market conditions in distressed regions of the country and the impact of its asset sales on these conditions. The RTC is also required to make a semi-annual appearance before the House and Senate Banking Committees (Title V).

The Department of Housing and Urban Affairs is required to submit an annual report on the activities and conditions of the Federal Home Loan Mortgate Corporation by June 30 each year (Title VII).

The act establishes a new Credit Standards Advisory Committee for two years. The Committee is asked to submit an annual report each year on its activities and include recommendations to help the federal regulators ensure that financial institutions follow prudential credit standards and lending practices (Title XII).

Appraisal Standards

The Appraisal Subcommittee of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council is required to report each January on Monitoring the States' requirements for certifying and licensing appraisers and the Federal regulators' and the RTC's appraisal standards, and on its progress toward establishing a national registry of State-certified and licensed appraisers (Title XI).

GAO Audits

The U.S. General Accounting Office is directed to annually audit the financial transactions of BIF, SAIF, and the FSLIC Resolution Fund and is granted access to all books and records needed to facilitate its audit (Title II). GAO is given the authority to audit the Resolution Trust Corporation (Title V), the Resolution Funding Corporation (Title V), the Federal Housing Finance Board (Title XII) and the mortgage transactions of the Federal National Mortgage Association (Title VII).

SAFETY AND SOUNDNESS ISSUES

Deposit Insurance

The Treasury Department, in consultation with OCC, the Federal Reserve, DOTS, FDIC, NCUA and OMB, shall undertake a major study of the system of federal deposit insurance. Topics include risk-based insurance premiums, incentives for market discipline, the scope of coverage and its impact on the liability of the insurance fund, market value accounting, impact on the funds of state and federal bankruptcy exemptions, closure or recapitalization policies for weak or insolvent institutions, the efficiency of housing subsidies through the FHLBS, deposit insurance alternatives, risk-management, the credit union insurance fund, and increasing the use of private audit reports in the supervisory process. The study is due 18 months after enactment and will be submitted to Congress (Title X).

GAO will also conduct a study of deposit insurance issues, including policy considerations affecting the scope of coverage, bank insurance contracts, and the definition of a "deposit." The report is to be submitted to Congress within 18 months of enactment (Title X).

Title II requires the FDIC to undertake three special studies of: the passthrough of deposit insurance to individual investors in unit investment trusts or individual participants in pension or profit sharing plans; the advisability of implementing a system of risk-based insurance premiums; and the availability of liability insurance for the officers and directors of insured depository institutions. The last study is to be undertaken in cooperation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General.

The Resolution Trust Corporation

The RTC Oversight Board must appear before the Banking Committees prior to start-up to describe its business plans, any proposed regulations and its case resolution schedule (Title V).

The RTC shall disclose any assisted transaction agreements, first to the Banking Committees and then to the public. If disclosure of such agreements would be contrary to the public interest, the Board must submit an explanation to the Banking Committees and also publish it in the Federal Register (Title V).

The Oversight Board is accountable to the RTC and, under extraordinary circumstances the Board can remove the FDIC from its responsibilities undertaken on behalf of the RTC. However, before doing so it must notify Congress of its decision and the reasons for it. In this event, the Oversight Board must develop a management plan that includes policies for employment and retention and submit it to Congress 60 days before removing the FDIC (Title V).

Risk-Management

The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council shall study the efficacy of establishing a training program in risk-management for the regulators and managers of insured depository institutions.

Other Safety and Soundness Studies

The U.S. General Accounting Office will examine the contracting practices of companies providing services to insured depository institutions (Title II).

The OTS will include a section in its first annual report on the geographic location of its regional offices and the allocation of resources and responsibilities among these offices (Title III).

The act takes significant steps toward establishing common capital standards among the separate sections of banking and thrift industries. It also requires the establishment of uniform accounting standards to be used in determining capital ratios. The act requires the regulatory agencies to report annually any remaining discrepancies in capital standards and the reasons for such discrepancies to the Banking Committees and publish them in the Federal Register (Title XII).

GAO Audit and Access Authority

The Act gives GAO comprehensive authority to audit organizations and persons performing any function under the Act, or any Act amended by the Act, providing goods and services or receiving financial assistance under the Act. It also provides the Comptroller General with access to the information needed to conduct any such audits. There are two exceptions to this very general provision. First, the Act does not change existing law with respect to the Comptroller's audit authority over the Federal Reserve. Second, GAO's audit authority over the Federal National Mortgage Association, is limited to FNMA's mortgage transactions (Title XII).

Govenment Sponsored Enterprises

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment directing the Controller General to undertake a study regarding the capital requirements of the FHLMC, the FNMA, the Federal Farm Credit System, the Federal Agriculture Mortage Corporation, the College Construction Loan Insurance Corporation, and the Student Loan Marketing Association, (government-sponsored enterprises). The Conference Report contains the House provision with an amendment to expand this GAO study to include two reports—one to be submitted to Congress 9 months after enactment, one to be submitted 21 months after enactment. The evaluation of risks related to each GSE would include: the volume and type of securities outstanding which are issued or guaranteed by each GSE; the capitalization of each GSE; and the degree of risk involved in the operation of each GSE due to factors such as credit risk, interest risk, management and operations risk, and business risk.

GAO would also report on the quality and timeliness of information currently available to the public and the Federal Government concerning the extent and nature of the activities of GSEs and the financial risk associated with such activities.

GAO would design the study in consultation and cooperation with each GSE and the appropriate agency and department with respect to each GSE (Farm Credit Administration and the Departments of Agriculture, Education, and Housing and Urban Development). If the Administrator or Secretaries disagree with the results of the study, their views would be included as an addendum to the report. The report would be due 9 months after enactment of the Act. When the report is forwarded to the Congress, it is the intention of the conferees that such report be referred to the appropriate Committees of Congress with jurisdiction over such GSEs. In addition, the Comptroller General would be required to consult with each of the government-sponsored enterprises. The GSEs must be active participants in the study and cooperate with the GAO in the development of the study and its conclusions. It is understood that some of the information to which the GAO may be given access in the course of the study may be commercially or financially sensitive. The GAO must assure that it does not make public disclosure of such commercially or financially sensitive information. This consultation requirement is not intended to expand the regulatory rule or authority of any of the GSEs' regulators. It recognizes that Treasury's regulatory role is solely to ensure the orderly function of the securities market with respect to Treasury and GSE securities issuances. The role of the other regulators with respect to the report is solely to ensure the production of a study that will have maximum utility to the Congress.

Credit Unions

GAO shall study the nation's credit union system, including credit unions' capital and condition, their role in the marketplace, the adequacy of their regulation and supervision, rules governing the common bond, and the structure and financial condition of the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund and report to the Banking Committees within 18 months (Title XII).

Appraisal Standards

The Appraisal Subcommittee of FFIEC shall conduct a study to determine a) whether available real estate sales and financing data are sufficient to permit appraisers to properly estimate the values of properties in federally related transactions, and b) the feasibility and desirability of extending the provisions of the title to personal property appraising and appraisers related to Federal financial and public policy interests. The study is due 18 months after enactment and is submitted to Congress (Title XI).

LIMITING THE COST OF FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit an annual report to the House Committee on Ways and Means and to the Senate on federal financial assistance transactions, the amount of assistance provided, and any tax benefits resulting from these transactions (Title XIV).

RTC shall review insolvent financial institution cases resolved by FSLIC since January 1, 1988, and identify means by which it can reduce costs under these agreements. The report is directed to the Oversight Board and Congress (Title V).

In addition, GAO shall conduct a review of the 1988 FSLIC cases and provide cost estimates for these agreements. The report will be submitted to Congress (Title V).

MINORITY ISSUES

Four studies, three to be included in the appropriate agencies' annual reports, are designed to further the interests of women and/or minorities.

For example, the Treasury Department, OTS and FDIC will include a section in each of their annual reports on actions taken to preserve the present number of minority institutions, and to establish priorities for these institutions in mergers and acquisitions and the resolution of failed thrifts (Title III).

The RTC shall include a section in its annual report on the inclusion of women and minorities in the bidding process for failed institutions (Title V).

A provision in Title XII requires the banking and failure resolution agencies to establish an outreach program to encourage the inclusion of minorities and women in all contracts that they make and requires each agency to report its progress to Congress.

The Treasury Department, in consultation with the appropriate Federal banking agencies and the NCUA, shall also include a section in its annual report on the results of a one-time study of methods for increasing the use of under-utilized minority and women's banks, and limited income credit unions, as depositories or financial agents of federal agencies (Title XII).

HOUSING REPORT AND STUDIES

Five studies reflect Congress' concern over the availability and affordability of housing in the U.S.

In its annual report to Congress, HUD will include a section on RTC use of secondary market agencies to provide housing for low- and moderate-income families, including development of risk sharing structures (Title V).

HUD shall submit to Congress its reasons for denying any FHLMC request for approval (Title VII).

The Federal Housing Finance Board shall annually report on each FHLBank's use of advances for low-income housing and community development. The reports are submitted to the Bank Advisory Councils and Congress (Title VII).

GAO shall audit and evaluate the Affordable Housing Program after it has been operating for two years. GAO shall report to Congress its conclusions and recommended improvements or modifications to the program (Title VII).

The appropriate Federal regulatory agencies (the Federal Reserve, FDIC, OCC, DOTS, NCUA, and HUD) are required by the Act to collect and publish data on mortgage applicants (in addition to mortgagors who are already covered by existing legislation). The data are to be categorized by income levels, racial characteristics, and gender. The Federal Reserve is to report annually to Congress on the utility of these requirements (Title XII).

COMPENSATION COMPARABILITY

FDIC, OCC, NCUA, FHFB, RTC, OTS, and the Farm Credit Administration should try to maintain comparability in compensation schedules, and inform the other agency heads and Congress when establishing and adjusting the schedules (Title XII).

CONSUMER ISSUES

Two studies seek to protect the interests of consumers.

The Federal Reserve will conduct an examination of trends in the provision of retail banking services. To contain the cost of the study and any reporting burden on institutions, the Federal Reserve may focus on certain bank services and the fees charged for their provision at a sample of financial institutions of differing sizes located in different regions of the country. The Federal Reserve shall use these data to determine whether the additional insurance premiums imposed by the act are passed on to consumers or whether they decrease the availability of banking services. The Federal Reserve will report the results of the study annually for seven years (Title X).

The Treasury Department will conduct a study, due 18 months after enactment, on the possibility of issuing U.S. securities in small denominations to benefit the small investor and encourage savings (Title XII).

TITLE XI. REAL ESTATE APPRAISAL REFORM AMENDMENTS

PURPOSES

Establishes that the purpose of this title is to protect Federal financial and public policy interests in real estate related transactions.

APPRAISAL SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE FFIEC

This section establishes an appraisal subcommittee of the Federal Financial Institutions Examinations Council ("FFIEC") consisting of the representatives of the heads of the agencies comprising the FFIEC (the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Office of Thrift Supervision, and the National Credit Union Administration Board.) These representatives shall be persons with demonstrated knowledge and competence in appraisal profession.

FUNCTIONS OF THE APPRAISAL SUBCOMMITTEE

The functions of the Appraisal Subcommittee include: monitoring the State appraiser certification and licensing systems; monitoring appraisal standards and determinations regarding which Federally related transactions will require the use of certified appraisers and which licensed appraisers; maintaining a national registry of certified and licensed appraisers; and monitoring the work of the Appraisal Foundation, a nonprofit corporation of the appraisal industry. The Subcommittee must report annually to Congress on its activities.

Chairperson of the Subcommittee

The Subcommittee will select a chairperson from among its members who will serve a two year term.

Officers and Staff

The Conferees intend for all necessary officers and staff of the Subcommittee to be appointed and compensated in the same manner as other employees of the FFIEC.

Powers of the Appraisal Subcommittee

The Subcommittee will have those administrative powers needed to carry out its functions.

Procedures for Establishing Standards

The establishment of appraisal standards and other requirements will be subject to the publication of notice and receipt of comments or the holding of public hearings and other provisions in accordance with procedures set forth in Section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code.

Start-up Funding Appropriations

The Appraisal Subcommittee is authorized to borrow from the Secretary of the Treasury $5,000,000 in start up funds on the date of enactment. Any additional funds needed by the Subcommittee would be subject to the normal appropriations process. These funds are to be repaid from fees collected by the Subcommittee under section 1109.

Roster of State Certified and Licensed Appraisers

The Subcommittee is authorized to maintain a roster of all State certified and licensed appraisers eligible for Federally related transactions; and to collect from eligible appraisers who perform or seek to perform Federally related work an annual registration fee of not more than $50. These funds are to be used to fund the activities of the Subcommittee, to repay the Treasury, and to help defray certain expenses of the Appraisal Foundation.

Functions of the Federal Financial Institution Regulatory Agencies Relating to Standards

Each Federal financial institution regulatory agency and the Resolution Trust Corporation are required to establish appraisal standards that meet the minimum requirements adopted by the Appraisal Foundation. Additional standards can be required as well. Section 1110 requires that appraisals for the purposes of the title means "written appraisals". Conferees used the term "written appraisal" and defined the term to be absolutely clear about what is required of the title. In doing so the Conferees do not intend to imply that the term "appraisal" as used elsewhere in laws or regulations means anything other than a written appraisal.

Time for Proposal and Adoption of Standards

Appraisal standards must be proposed within six months and final within twelve months of enactment.

Functions of the Federal Financial Institution Regulatory Agencies Relating to Qualifications

Each Federal financial institution regulatory agency and the Resolution Trust Corporation are required to prescribe which categories of federally related transactions should be appraised by a State certified appraiser and which by a State licensed appraiser.

Transactions Requiring a Certified Appraiser

All federally related transactions involving property with a value over $1,000,000 must be completed by a State certified appraiser. Additional guidelines are provided by the section.

Transactions Requiring A Licensed Appraiser

All federally related transactions not requiring a State certified appraiser must be completed by a State licensed appraiser.

Time for Proposal and Adoption of Rules

Rules pursuant to sections 1113 and 1114 must be proposed within six months and final within twelve months of enactment.

Certification and Licensing Requirements

State certified appraisers must meet the requirements for certification issued by the Appraisal Foundation, including a passing grade on a uniform examination; and licensed appraisers must satisfy State or territory requirements for licensing. Federal agencies and instrumentalities and Federally recognized entities are authorized to establish additional appraiser certification and licensing qualification criteria. Because State licensed appraisers are not required to meet Appraisal Foundation criteria, the Conferees intend that the Appraisal Subcommittee and the Federal agencies should pay particular attention to the adequacy of State appraiser licensing requirements.

Establishment of State Certifying and Licensing Agencies

Monitoring of State Agencies

Section 1118 gives the Appraisal Subcommittee the responsibility of monitoring State appraiser certifying and licensing agencies for the purpose of determining whether a State's agency's policies, practices and procedures are consistent with this title. The Appraisal Subcommittee and all agencies, instrumentalities and federally recognized entities under the title are ordered not to recognize appraiser certifications and licenses from States whose appraisal policies, practices or procedures are found to be inconsistent with the title.

Federal agencies, instrumentalities, and entities under the title will accept State approved certifications and licenses unless the Appraisal Subcommittee issues a written finding that, among other things, could assert that State decisions concerning appraisal standards, appraiser qualifications, and supervision of appraiser practices are being made in a manner that does not carry out the purposes of the title. In this regard it is the intention of Conferees that States avoid potential conflicts of interest in licensing and certifying appraisers. Decisions as to whether or not to license and certify, or to discipline or de-license or de-certify appraisers should not be made by the same state officials whose responsibilities include licensing realtors, or engaging in real estate promotion activities, or financing real estate development.

The Conferees do not intend to impose any particular organization upon the States and a State may choose to have appraisal and real estate functions in the same department. The Conferees recognize that each state will have fiscal and other factors to consider when its real estate appraiser licensing and certification system is established. The Conferees do intend; however, that the potential conflicts of interest mentioned above must be avoided. If officials charged with licensing and certifying appraisers are found in the same state agency or department that licenses realtors or promotes real estate development, then adequate safeguards must be established to ensure that conflicts of interest are avoided between these two functions. The Subcommittee should examine the adequacy of such safeguards in making its decisions on whether to disapprove for Federal functions the appraisers licensed and certified by a given state. If such safeguards are not adequate, State certified and licensed appraisers should not be approved for Federal purposes.

Recognition of State Certified and Licensed Appraisers

After July 1, 1991 all appraisals in connection with federally related transactions must be performed by State certified or licensed appraisers. An extension until December 1991 is permitted if the Appraisal Subcommittee finds that a State is making substantial progress in establishing a State certification and licensing system. In addition, the requirements of this title may be waived temporarily if such requirements lead to inordinate delays in the performance of federally related appraisals in a State.

Violations

Violations of this title are punishable by civil fines. The authority for assessment and collection of such fines is found in section 8(i) of the FDIA and section 206(k) of the FCUA.

Definitions

This section provides definitions of terms used in the section, including the term 'written appraisal' referred to in section 1110.

Miscellaneous Provisions

This section provides for recognition, among the States, of each other's certifications and licenses in connection with temporary practice and prohibits discrimination against certified and licensed appraisers solely by virtue of membership or lack of membership in any particular appraisal organization.

TITLE XII. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

OCC COMPENSATION PROVISIONS

The House version is adopted with modifications. Under this provision, the Comptroller is given the authority to appoint persons as employees of the OCC and to direct their activities. The Comptroller is also authorized to fix the number and compensation of all OCC employees. The term employees is intended to include examiners, attorneys, and all other employees of the Office. The conferees emphasize that, while many of the activities of the OCC are subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, all personnel-related matters, including determinations regarding the number of employees to be hired, their status, pay, and functions to be performed, are within the exclusive authority of the Comptroller to determine. Treasury may not veto or block the implementation of the Comptroller's decisions on these matters.

The authority to fix compensation under this provision includes the authority to fix total compensation, including pay and benefits. (The exemption from chapter 51 and subchapter 3 of chapter 53 confirms OCC's current exclusion from these provisions based on its nonappropriated status.) The guiding standard is comparability in total compensation and benefits with compensation and benefits offered by the other Federal bank regulatory agencies. To further this objective, the Comptroller is given the same authorities as the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to establish compensation and benefits programs. Thus, for instance, a 401k offered like that offered by the Federal Reserve System may be offered by the Comptroller to employees of the Office. In addition like the FDIC, OCC salaries limitations (including, limitations on adjustments, e.g. 5 U.S.C. Sec. 5308) are not applicable. Other provisions of this legislation confirm the OCC's exemption from 5 U.S.C. 5373 and provide, by amendment to 5 U.S.C. Sec. 3132(a)(1), that the OCC is not covered by the Senior Executive Service.

NCUA, FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION EMPLOYMENT PROVISIONS

The conferees adopted provisions of Sections 1203 and 1210 which are identical to comparable sections of the House bill.

Credit Standards Advisory Committee

Section 1205 of the Conference Report contains the language of the House bill amended only to conform with the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act which provides for a termination of the Committee after two years. In preparing recommendations to ensure consistent credit standards, and lending practices for all insured depository institutions, the Committee shall take into consideration that credit unions have traditionally made loans to persons unable to obtain them elsewhere and that such lending practices by credit unions should be encouraged in the future.

Comparability of pay of Federal banking regulatory agencies

The House bill contains various sections conforming the authority of the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Oversight Board, the Federal Housing Finance Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the National Credit Union Administration to hire and pay their employees.

The conference substitute adopts the House provisions as modified to require that the various federal banking regulatory agencies consult with each other in fixing compensation and benefits for their employees.

It is the conferee's intent in eliminating the restrictions of title 5 that the various federal banking regulatory agencies be able to address identifiable personnel. In requiring consultation, the intention was to ensure the bank regulatory agencies do not compete with each other for these unique personnel.

Limitation on use of taxpayer funds

Section 1208 provides that funds appropriated or borrowed pursuant to an authorization contained in this Act may be used only for purposes permitted in the Act and may not be otherwise used for making any payment to any shareholder in, or creditor to, any insured financial institution. It is the express intent of the conferees that nothing in Section 1208 shall be constructed to mean that funds pursuant to an authorization contained in the Act may not be used by an appropriate Federal regulatory agency, pursuant to its jurisdiction, to arrange or carry out the acquisition, merger or liquidation of any insured depository institution.

Fair Lending Oversight and Enforcement

Section 1213 of H.R. 1278 included amendments to the House Mortgage Disclosure Act of 1979 ("HMDA") that required collection and reporting of data on race, gender, and income characteristics of mortgagors and applicants for mortgage loans. These amendments were intended to provide data to assist in identifying discriminatory lending practices and enforcing antidiscrimination statutes. The Senate bill contained no comparable HMDA amendments, but also sought to address mortgage discrimination by mandating (in section 1406 of S. 774) studies and legislative recommendations by each of the Federal banking regulatory agencies.

The conferees found both provisions meritorious. Accordingly, the House recedes to the Senate on section 1406 of S. 774. In addition, the Senate recedes to the House on section 1213 of H.R. 1278 with an amendment to provide flexibility for regulatory agencies in designing the format for the collection, disclosure, and reporting of the required data. The conferees have also provided an exemption from the new HMDA reporting requirements for depository institutions with less than $30 million in assets.

An especially significant change to HMDA is the new requirement for disclosure of information on completed applications. Collection of data on completed applications will permit comparison of acceptance and rejected statistics. The conferees chose to define "completed application" in a manner similar to that adopted in regulations under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act but to exclude from the definition only approvals or reports by secondary market entities, government entities, and private mortgage insurers. The regulatory agencies should adopt regulations designed to prevent mortgage lenders from evading the requirements of the Act through inordinate delays and information requests that leave applications in the "pending" category rather than the "completed" category, for reporting purposes. Lenders must use diligence in obtaining the information necessary to complete applications.

The conferees placed highest priority on the collection of analytically useful data by means of which to identify and eliminate discriminatory lending practices. The conferees expect that the regulatory agencies will use the flexibility they have been accorded to develop reporting formats that maximize public disclosure of analytically useful data while minimizing reporting burdens for lenders. The conferees recognize the loan application register approach, under which lending institutions keep and make available the appropriate information in an application-by-application format, as one way to efficiently collect and maintain the required data. Such an approach is currently employed by thrift institutions under supervision of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

To ensure that lending patterns are as thoroughly and accurately understood as possible, the conference report also would permit lending institutions to submit additional relevant data or explanatory material to the appropriate agency in writing.

The Home Mortgage Disclosure Act, as amended by this Act, requires among other things reporting by mortgage lenders to the appropriate regulatory agencies. A primary purpose of such reporting is to assist regulatory agencies in identifying possible discriminatory lending patterns that warrant closer scrutiny. To accomplish this purpose, it is essential that the data submitted to the agencies be in a form that facilitates the task of identifying any discriminatory lending patterns that disadvantage women, minority borrowers, or predominantly minority or low- or moderate-income neighborhoods. To accomplish this task, cross-tabulation of the loan application and disposition data, stratified at a minimum by (i) applicant race and gender, (ii) racial composition of neighborhood, and (iii) applicant income level is recommended. It should not be necessary to prepare separate reports for each census tract, but the required information could by disclosed category to facilitate regression analysis. The reports submitted by mortgage lenders to the regulatory agencies could neither include cross-tabulated data or present raw data in a form permitting its cross-tabulation by the agencies.

To ensure that there is a complete, accurate and fair picture of lending patterns, the conferees believe it is important to have data on the impact of requirements imposed on mortgage lenders by the secondary market. To develop the necessary data, the conferees considered imposing the new HMDA disclosure requirements on secondary market entities. Ultimately, however, the conferees chose not to impose such requirements out of concern that they could prove unduly burdensome for secondary market entities, and in recognition of the fact that the information necessary to identify discriminatory secondary market requirements could be collected from the originating lender—i.e., those conducting a retail loan or mortgage banking operation for the origination, processing and approval or rejection of mortgage loan applications. Accordingly, the conferees chose to acquire the desired information about secondary market requirements from the primary market, by requiring reporting institutions to disclose the class of purchaser for loans sold. It is recommended that regulators create a sufficiently small number of "classes" to facilitate meaningful analysis but retain sufficient separation to permit identification of potentially discriminatory practices by particularly large secondary market entities. Each of the large government-sponsored enterprises in the secondary market would comprise a distinct class. Additional classes—for example, insurance companies, depository institutions, or private investors—should be established based on common traits and significance, possibly determined on the basis of aggregate market share, in the secondary market.

The HMDA amendments in the conference report will be effective for calendar years beginning after December 31, 1989. Thus, lending institutions reporting under these amendments must begin compiling the required data on January 1, 1990.

Amendment to the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977

Section 1214 of H.R. 1278 amended the Community Reinvestment Act ("CRA") to require disclosure of CRA ratings and evaluation reports. The intent of the section was to promote enforcement of CRA by allowing the public to know both what regulatory agencies are telling depository institutions and what the community reinvestment records of particular depository institutions are. The Senate bill contained no comparable provisions.

The Senate receded to the House with certain amendments. First, in lieu of the existing five-tiered numerical rating system, the conference report provides for a four-tiered descriptive rating system. The report further requires that ratings assigned under the new system be disclosed, along with written evaluations of the institution's performance in meeting community credit needs under the assessment factors set forth in CRA regulations.

Second, although the conferees deleted from statutory language the requirement enacted by the House that CRA evaluations place special emphasis on certain types of credit, the conferees nonetheless intend that the written evaluations, including the statement, discussion, supporting facts, and conclusions shall place special emphasis on the insured depository institution's record of serving the housing credit needs of low and moderate-income persons, small business credit needs, small farm credit needs, and rural economic development. In expressing their intent that CRA evaluations place special emphasis on these particular credit needs, however, the conferees do not intend to indicate that these categories constitute the entire universe of desirable community investment activities.

Third, the conferees clarified the disclosure requirements in the House provision to permit certain confidential communications between examiners and institutions. This provision should be construed narrowly to protect only information potentially harmful to safety and soundness, information relating to recommendations for future community investment performance, and information not directly related to community investment (e.g., strategic plans) whose release might adversely affect an institution's competitive position. The provision is not intended to shield an institution from whatever harm to its competitive position might naturally flow from a purely factual disclosure of its actual community investment performance.

Capital and Accounting Standards

Section 1215 requires the Federal banking agencies to establish, within one year, uniform accounting standards to be used for determining the capital ratios of all federally insured financial institutions and for other purposes. Each Federal banking agency must also report annually to the Senate and House Banking Committees any differences between the capital standard used by such agency and capital standards used by other agencies. The report to the Senate and House Banking Committees must also contain an explanation of the reasons for any discrepancies in such accounting a capital standards.

The report shall include recommendations for simplifying and clarifying the capital and accounting standards used for federally-insured depository institutions and any recommendations deemed appropriate for improved auditing of federally-insured depository institutions.

Equal Opportunity

Section 1216 places the OCC, the FDIC, the Oversight Board of the RTC, the RTC and REFCORP under the provision of Executive Order 11478. The Section limits of the FMLMC and the FNMA's compliance to the first two sections of 11478 to allow FHLMC and FNMA to act under the private employers grievance process rather than two grievance processes. Subsection (b) makes it clear they are not subject to both private employer and government rules in terms of remedies.

This Section also requires that each listed agency develop a minority outreach program to ensure, to the maximum extent possible, the inclusion of minorities and women in all contracts entered into by such agency and requires each agency to report to Congress on its progress.

Cross-Marketing restrictions on grandfathered nonbank banks

Current law generally prohibits a grandfathered nonbank bank from allowing its products or services to be cross-marketed by or through an affiliate unless the affiliate engages only in activities permissible for a bank holding company. This section revises the restriction to permit an affiliate of such a bank to cross-market the bank's products or services with products or services of the affiliate that the Federal Reserve Board has by regulation determined to be permissible for bank holding companies under section 4(c)(8) of the Bank Holding Company Act (other than certain security-related products or services). No other substantive change in current law is intended.

TITLE XIII. PARTICIPATION BY STATE HOUSING FINANCE AUTHORITIES

State Housing Finance Authorities have proven to be effective in the effort to promote affordable housing and home ownership opportunities. The intent of this Title is to provide State Housing Finance Authorities, as defined in the Act, with the authority to purchase mortgage-related assets from the RTC or from a financial institution with respect to which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is acting as a receiver or conservator. The State Housing Finance Authorities will be required to invest any net profits attributable to the ownership of such assets in the financing, refinancing or rehabilitation of low and moderate income housing within the jurisdiction of such State Housing Finance Authority.

TITLE XIV

TAX PROVISIONS

1. REPEAL OF SPECIAL RULES APPLICABLE TO FINANCIALLY TROUBLED FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Present Law

Special tax rules applicable to financially troubled thrift institutions were adopted in 1981. In the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (the "1988 Act"), these special rules were expanded to cover financially troubled banks and certain thrift institutions which did not meet a qualifying asset test. These rules are scheduled to expire for transactions after December 31, 1989.

(1) ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS TO FINANCIALLY TROUBLED FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Payments from the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (the "FSLIC") or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (the "FDIC") to a financially troubled financial institution are not included in the income of the recipient institution and no basis reduction is required. However, the 1988 Act provided for a reduction in certain tax attributes equal to 50 percent of the amount of the financial assistance.

(2) TREATMENT AS A TAX-FREE REORGANIZATION

Certain FSLIC- or FDIC-assisted acquisitions involving a financially troubled financial institution may qualify as tax-free reorganizations, without regard to the requirement that the shareholders of an acquired corporation must generally maintain a meaningful ownership interest in the acquiring corporation (the "continuity of interest" requirement).

(3) NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYOVERS

The general limitations on the ability of an acquiring corporation to utilize the net operating losses, built-in losses, and excess credits of a corporation acquired in a tax-free reorganization are relaxed in the case of a tax-free acquisition of a financially troubled financial institution.

House Bill

The House bill repeals the special tax rules applicable to financially troubled financial institutions. The Treasury Department is granted regulatory authority to issue regulations providing rules for the Federal income tax treatment of transactions involving financially troubled financial institutions. The repeal is effective for transactions occurring on or after May 10, 1989.

The House bill also clarifies that the reduction in tax attributes equal to 50 percent of the amount of nontaxable financial assistance received with respect to FDIC transactions and certain FSLIC transactions (involving institutions which did not meet a qualifying asset test) is effective on the same date that the special tax rules relating to financially troubled financial institutions were extended to such transactions (i.e., November 10, 1988). The provision is effective as if included in the 1988 Act.

In addition, the House bill conforms the provisions of the Code to take into account successor entities to the FSLIC established by the bill. The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate Amendment

The Senate amendment contains a sense of the Senate resolution that the House of Representatives should repeal the special tax rules applicable to financially troubled financial institutions.

The repeal should be effective on or after the date of enactment of FIRREA.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with certain clarifications.

Under the interim rules for taxable asset acquisitions set forth in the legislative history of this provision, financial assistance received by, or paid with respect to, financially troubled financial institutions is generally treated as taxable. Such assistance is deemed to be received by the financially troubled financial institution at the time the assets of such institution are sold or transferred. As a result, the financial assistance generally will be offset by the net operating losses and built-in losses of the financially troubled financial institution. Thus, an acquired financially troubled financial institution will generally have no net tax liability resulting from the receipt (or deemed receipt) of financial assistance.

It is possible, however, that the net operating losses and built-in losses of the financially troubled financial institution may not always be sufficient to offset the amount of financial assistance received (or deemed received) by the troubled institution.[1] In this regard, the conferees intend that the regulatory authority granted by the bill to the Treasury Department may be exercised to limit the potential applicability of section 7507 of the Code [2] in cases where financially troubled financial institutions are acquired in transactions in which Federal financial assistance is provided. Nonetheless, the conferees understand that the Treasury Department may exercise the regulatory authority provided to it by the bill to issue regulations or other guidance providing that, in certain circumstances, no net tax liability would be payable by financially troubled financial institutions as a result of the receipt of Federal financial assistance. It is expected that any such guidance be consistent with the purposes of this provision and with the overall grant of regulatory authority to the Treasury Department.

The conferees also intend that the regulatory authority granted the Treasury Department under the bill would permit the Treasury Department to determine the extent to which an acquiror of a financially troubled financial institution receiving Federal assistance would have transferee liability with respect to any tax liability of the acquired institution. For example, the conferees understand that the Treasury Department may exercise such authority to provide that transferee liability will not be asserted against an acquiror in a taxable acquisition in which Federal financial assistance is provided.

2. TAX EXEMPTION FOR RESOLUTION FUNDING CORPORATION (REFCORP) AND RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION (RTC)

Present Law

Federal tax exemptions for instrumentalities of the United States organized on or after July 18, 1984, may be provided only by an amendment to the Internal Revenue Code or by a provision (not amending the Code) enacted as part of a revenue act.

House Bill

The House bill provides exemptions from Federal income tax for REFCORP and RTC in the Internal Revenue Code (rather than in banking law). The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate Amendment

No provision.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

3. ANNUAL REPORTS ON TRANSACTIONS IN WHICH FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IS PROVIDED

Present Law

Financially troubled financial institutions may receive financial assistance from governmental entities providing Federal deposit insurance. There is no requirement that the Congress be provided with information concerning such assistance transactions.

House Bill

The House bill requires the Treasury Department to submit annual reports to the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees concerning the amounts of Federal financial assistance and the availability (and utilization) of any resulting tax benefits. The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate Amendment

No provision.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that the reports are to be provided the Senate as well as the House Ways and Means Committee.

4. TAX TREATMENT OF THE FDIC AND ITS OBLIGATIONS

Present Law

Obligations issued by the FDIC are not exempt from Federal tax. The FDIC is exempt from Federal tax.

House Bill

The Houe bill relates present law with respect to the Federal tax treatment of the FDIC, obligations issued by the FDIC, and financial institutions for which the FDIC acts as a receiver. The provisions are effective on the date of enactment.

Senate Amendment

No provision.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

5. TWO ANNUAL STUDIES OF THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE PUBLIC DEBT AND ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES (GSES)

Present Law

The Congress has established a number of GSEs which are permitted to issue debt and/or guarantee other securities.

House Bill

The House bill requires the Treasury Department to annually conduct a study to assess the financial safety and soundness of the activities of GSEs and the impact of their operations on Federal borrowing. The results of the study are to be submitted to the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees. The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Senate Amendment

No provision.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that (1) two studies are required, (2) appropriate confidentiality safeguards are provided, and (3) the results of such studies are to be provided to the Congress. The first report is to be provided on or before May 15, 1990, and the second report is to be provided on or before May 15, 1991. The conference agreement requires that the Treasury Secretary determine and maintain the confidentiality of the books, records, and information made available to the Treasury Department under this provision. The Treasury Secretary is authorized to determine what is confidential in a manner that is generally consistent with the level of confidentiality established by the GSE from which the Treasury Secretary received the information. In providing for these studies, the conferees do not intend to expand the traditicnal regulatory role of the Treasury Department with respect to GSEs.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 1278) to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, August 3, 1989, and the order of the House of earlier today, the conference report is considered as having been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the report and seek time, pursuant to House rule XXVIII.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the conference report.

[1] This could occur, for example, in cases in which the financially troubled financial institution was a member of a group of corporations filing a consolidated return and the net operating losses of such institution were used to offset the income of other members of the affiliated group.

[2] Section 7507 generally provides an exemption (or in some cases a deferral) for insolvent banks from any tax that would reduce assets necessary for payment of depositors.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I do not oppose the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Neither manager is opposed to the conference report. Therefore, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] will be recognized for 20 minutes, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, we return a conference report on H.R. 1278 which incorporates a compromise on the financing of the savings and loan resolution package. The compromise was required by the failure of the other body to gain the necessary 60 votes for a waiver of the Gramm-Rudman Budget Act to make in order the onbudget financing adopted by the conference report and the House of Representatives. While the position of the House is clear, it became necessary to reconvene the conference last night and work on a compromise that would gain approval in the other body and the signature of the President.

The compromise calls for $20 billion onbudget this year, with borrowings of $30 billion placed offbudget in future years. This agreement to place the first $20 billion onbudget will enable the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to move ahead immediately to start closing the insolvent thrifts that are currently draining the insurance fund of some $20 to $30 million a day.

That was one of my primary concerns about the offbudget mechanism, the fact that it would delay the resolution of the cases pending on the marketing of bonds. Mr. Speaker, I have favored an onbudget financing from the first day of the long battle over the legislation. The House has twice endorsed the position. However, we must have a bill, and the compromise entered into last night is the best we will be able to do under the circumstances. The President created last-minute problems in both Houses yesterday when he decided to send up a hastly drafted veto threat over the financing proposal adopted by the conference. As a result, we asked Secretary of the Treasury Nicholas Brady and OMB Director Richard Darman to appear before the conference last night, and we discussed the issues with them and gained their endorsement for the package before Members today.

This afternoon I received a letter from the President, and I read the President's letter as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 4, 1989.

Hon. HENRY B. GONZALEZ,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR HENRY: Last night the savings and loan conferees reached a compromise on the financing plan included in the savings and loan legislation. The compromise avoids any amendment of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget process, while including both the Administration's approach to financing and direct Treasury borrowing.

The conferees deserve our thanks and our congratulations. They have worked diligently to fashion a strong and responsible bill to deal with this extraordinarily serious problem. Importantly, the bill includes tough and sensible new capital and accounting standards. Final passage remains critical to the stability and solvency of our financial system.

This legislation has been developed in a bipartisan process. It is badly needed, and must be enacted without further delay. Consequently, I ask that the House and Senate approve this legislation today, and that we pledge to maintain our commitment to resolve this problem.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

Therefore, hopefully the President will create, as we say, this environment now of approval and adoption, no matter how critical we may be and whatever the timing was on the veto threat. That is past. He accepts what the conferees agreed to last night. It was an agreement not lightly entered into. We were most fortunate to have the presence of the Secretary and Director of OMB, the two persons in the executive branch most on the cutting edge on the budgetary problems confronting Members.

All the other provisions which were contained in the compromise package voted by the House yesterday remain on the legislation before Members. The strong capital standards, regulatory reforms, restructing of the supervisory agencies, safeguards for the disposing of recoverable assets, affordable housing, antidiscrimination protections. All that has been changed in the financing mechanism.

Mr. Speaker, much of the Federal financial regulatory and credit functions are restructured in the legislation to assure a more workable and responsive machinery to control this vast industry.

The Federal Home Loan Banks, which in recent years have shared a role in the crazy quilt of savings and loan regulation, will revert to their original function as providers of credit for mortgage lenders. They will operate under the supervision of a Federal Housing Finance Board that will include the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and four public members.

One of the primary functions of the banks will be to carry out the community investment and affordable housing programs incorporated in this legislation. The individual banks and the Federal Housing Finance Board should recognize the affordable housing program as an integral part of the Home Loan Bank System—a program to be affirmatively promoted by all 12 banks.

Specifically, the banks will make annual contributions to support subsidized advances through the affordable housing program. The amount of the contribution will be 5 percent of the bank's preceding year's net income in years 1990 through 1993, 6 percent of the preceding year's net income in year 1994, and 10 percent of the preceding year's net income in year 1995 and beyond. To ensure that the program is viable, the legislation requires that the banks must, at a minimum, contribute $50 million in years 1990 through 1993, $75 million in year 1994, and $100 million in years 1995 and beyond. The net income of the banks is based on their net income after the $300 million annual contribution to REFCORP and FICO, regardless of the dividends the Banks contribute to its legal reserve, but before any dividend payment or other extraordinary items.

The legislation does provide, as an emergency measure, the power for the Federal Housing Finance Board to suspend the program in the event contributions for the program contribute to the severe financial instability of any bank. The power is intended to be used only in extraordinary circumstances where the Board has determined on substantive evidence that there is financial instability. Such a determination cannot be made if the instability is caused by mismanagement, improper terms on advances, high administrative expenses or similar waste of resources. The suspension power is not to be used without solid evidence of need and any suspension must be only for temporary periods with the Board taking all steps necessary to resume the program at the earliest possible time.

The people who oppose using some of the advances for housing apparently have no problem with the advances being used to finance the operations of Vernon Savings, Lincoln Savings, Empire Savings, and the other high flyers.

There are $153 billion of advances outstanding today—a lot of which went to finance the speculative high flying activities.

Now, we say that the Federal Home Loan Banks must get out of the speculative loan business and tie some of their advances to needed housing. And we have objections from the President. Does he really understand what happened in the savings and loan industry?

We make no apologies for restoring the Federal Home Loan Banks to their purpose as generators of mortgage lending. It is difficult to believe that, with this huge cost being imposed on the taxpayers, we would have anyone on this floor talking "business as usual." That's exactly what they are saying when they say let the Federal Home Loan Banks operate as playpens for the industry.

I would like to clarify several technical issues.

First, I want to quickly address a question that has been raised since the conference report was originally filed on Tuesday. This relates to whether the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision is permitted to set credit-risk weights for purchased mortgage servicing rights which are based upon the credit-risk weight of the underlying asset.

The conference report does not require the Director to include purchased mortgage servicing rights in the 100-percent category in all cases, merely because that is the category they are presently assigned to by the OCC. The conference report contains the necessary administrative flexibility so that the Director can take steps to preserve strong capital standards as well as consider the actual risk presented to an institution which engages in mortgage servicing.

Second, both the House and Senate bills grandfathered all Federal savings banks as of date of enactment. The reported bill has the date of October 15, 1989. This covers only the FSLIC-insured savings banks. To cover all the banks we need to retain the language that was in both bills—"prior to date of enactment."

Third, one of the purposes of the waiver authority provided to the FDIC in the cross guarantee provisions of section 206 is to give the FDIC sufficient flexibility to facilitate the acquisition of a financially distressed bank by a bank holding company. For example, this authority could be used by the FDIC to provide a waiver from the cross-guarantee provision in connection with a transaction in which a bank holding company is proposing to acquire, without FDIC assistance, another bank holding company which is experiencing serious financial problems.

Under the provisions of the bill, the FDIC may, in its discretion, exempt any insured depository institution from the cross-guarantee provision if it determines the exemption is in the best interest of the BIF or the SAIF, subject to the conditions of that section.

In addition, I want to clarify that, Fourth, the conference report provides that savings associations that are owned by bank holding companies may take advantage of the so-called sister bank exception under section 23A for transactions with a bank or savings association that is 80-percent owned by the same bank holding company.

The conference report also established a general rule permitting savings associations owned by savings and loan holding companies to take advantage of the sister bank exception in section 23A after 5 years. The Federal Reserve Board would, of course continue to have full authority to grant exceptions to the provisions of sections 23A and 23B, either individually or by regulation, that would be consistent with the purposes of sections 23A and 23B. For example, it would be consistent with the provisions of this conferenced report for the Board to determine during the 5-year waiting period that it is appropriate to grant the sister bank exception to savings associations that are fully capitalized and operating in a safe and sound manner, whether or not the savings association is owned by a bank holding company.

Fifth, the conference report reenacts section 408(h) of the National Housing Act, transferring to the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision the authority to issue rules, regulations, and orders to carry out the purposes of the holding company provisions of the act. The conferees intend that the Director will retain the flexibility needed to respond to the wide variety of situations which may arise in addressing holding company issues by adopting rules and regulations to address recurring situations and orders to deal with specific cases. That the use of this authority to issue orders granting waivers or exemptions from requirements of the holding company regulations may only be granted upon the showing of good cause, and the demonstration that such a waiver would not adversely affect the safety or soundness of the savings association involved.

Finally, under section 912, the FDIC is specifically authorized to take enforcement actions against any savings association based on an examination of the association by the Corporation. Thus, it clearly is contemplated that the Corporation has the authority to examine any savings association to the extent the Corporation deems appropriate in order to exercise its enforcement authority and insure safety and soundness.

I urge adoption of the conference report because no member of the conference, or off the conference, has offered any viable alternative.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a tremendous disservice to the national interest for us not to give our final stamp of approval on this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has consumed 6 minutes.

Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] wish to yield time at this point, or does he reserve his time?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my time.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of the conference report.

Last night the conferees worked out a compromise on the funding issue, which was the only issue before the conference. I would say again, Mr. Speaker, that Chairman GONZALEZ assumed the role of a statesman. As chairman of the conference last night, HENRY GONZALEZ has indeed risen to the occasion on his first major bill as a chairman, and I am proud to be associated with him.

Mr. Speaker, I would say the same for Chairman RIEGLE, and certainly Senator GARN's role cannot be overstated.

I have spoken on previous occasions to the other issues in this conference report when we had the debate on the bill and the conference report earlier, so in the interest of time I will limit my remarks to the funding issue.

This bill, as the chairman of the committee has said, represents a true compromise. It is pretty close to the one I suggested 3 weeks ago at a leadership meeting at the White House and as offered by Senator CRANSTON and myself during the conference last week. I say that not meaning to be presumptuous but to emphasize again my own strong view and that of my chairman. If we fail to act tonight, the alternative could be the collapse of the savings and loan industry. Indeed, in my opinion, the only reason that has not happened is because depositors have not lost confidence in the Federal Deposit Insurance System.

I for one do not want to take the chance of another bank holiday type crisis.

I favored off-budget funding, and I urged the President to sign the conference report off budget or on budget. He did not take my advice and sent up a veto message just before the vote yesterday. Thank goodness 39 of us Republicans felt strongly enough that we needed to pass the conference report, and we did pass the conference report. Otherwise we would have been in a real mess this evening.

But the President got part of his way, and those who favor on budget got part of their way in the conference report. To say that it has to be all or nothing on the funding issue, I think, is not being responsible, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances in which we now find ourselves.

It is always easier to vote no, and I have done that a lot of times myself, but I truly feel the responsible vote tonight is an aye vote, and I urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the committee for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am, to say the least, extremely disappointed in our conferees, who pledged to this House that they would fight to the bitter end to hold the position of the House. The word is that we have to have a bill. Do we have to have this kind of a bill?

By objective analysis, it will cost us between $30 billion and $40 billion to go off budget, but now we are doing it to the tune of 60 percent, so maybe it will only cost us $20 billion more to go off budget. Is that something we want to do because we want to leave, because we want to get out of here? What kind of crazy priorities are we setting for ourselves,

Money for kids? That is on budget and on Gramm-Rudman.

Money for law enforcement? That is on budget. That is on Gramm-Rudman.

Money for education? That is on budget and on Gramm-Rudman.

Money for hunger? That is on budget. That is on Gramm-Rudman.

Money for drug enforcement? That is on budget, and that is on Gramm-Rudman.

But money to bail out the banks, the savings and loans, and the depositors, That is off budget.

What kind of discipline are we instilling here? The cost, the discipline, the very integrity of this House is at stake, as well as the integrity of the budget process. We are setting ourselves up to make compromises on the budgetary process, and I think we will live to rue the day.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the rejection of this conference report.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 1278. Yesterday's rejection of the on budget financing by the Senate and the narrow margin by which the House approved the first conference report on this legislation, has convinced me that compromise is the only route available to the conferees. Yesterday, President Bush made it very clear that he would veto any package that included on budget financing waiving the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

While I supported placing the funding on budget, I have been around politics long enough to know a lost cause when I see one. Certainly, we could have taken a hard-line position of no compromise and stood toe-to-toe with the President on this issue. But the big loser in that battle would have been the American people. With the cost of the savings and loan restructuring package increasing by some $20 million a day, the taxpayer cannot afford further delays.

Quite frankly, I had hoped that this legislation would have been disposed of by the end of April, particularly when the Financial Institutions Subcommittee, which I chair, reported out a bill that was acceptable to the President on April 13. But, we can't look back. We must look forward. We must conclude this legislation quickly and begin the job of rebuilding the savings and loan industry which at one point financed 80 percent of all the new homes in this country.

The President has agreed to a compromise. He did not get everything he wanted, nor did the House or the Senate get everything they wanted. The package before you today is indeed a compromise.

Last night, the administration sent the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Budget to meet with the conferees. Following a spirited discussion, I asked Secretary Brady and Budget Director Darman if the administration was willing to compromise or whether it was totally committed to its position. The Secretary indicated that there was room for compromise. In what I consider a gesture of good faith, he offered to place $10 billion on budget. This was followed by an offer from the House and Senate conferees to place $20 billion on budget, double what the President's first offer had been. The conferees in both the House and Senate agreed on the $20 billion figure, and the Secretary of the Treasury said he could accept the compromise. I feel that this is in the best interest of all parties. I hope we can put this issue behind us today and start rebuilding an industry that helped build America.

Nobody got everything they wanted in this legislation. But, if we continue this battle everyone will come out a loser. We are all winners now. Let us go out as winners.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the conference report.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RINALDO].

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant support of the conference report on H.R. 1278, the legislation to resolve the crisis in the savings and loan industry, the matter currently under discussion.

Mr. Speaker, as a practical matter, we must pass this bill because any further delay in resolving this problem adds enormously to the cost that could ultimately be borne by the taxpayer. Savings and loans that are bankrupt have to be closed, and money must be raised to pay individual depositors whose savings are held by failed thrifts. Federal action is required because the deposits at these institutions have been federally insured for the last 50 years. This system has prevented the periodic financial panics and bank runs that frequently occurred during the first 150 years of our history, causing untold numbers of Americans to lose all of their savings. If the Federal Government were to renege on this commitment, not only would individual depositors lose their savings, but customers of other federally insured banks would start a run on the banks such as occurred during the Depression.

In fact, there has already been a so-called silent run on savings and loans, which experienced $3.4 billion in withdrawals during the first quarter of this year. The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation does not now have sufficient funds to close failing institutions, which continue to lose an estimated $20 to $40 million per day. Allowing this situation to continue would cause a further loss of public confidence in our banking system and endanger the deposits of all Americans.

But while this legislation, on balance, is a necessary bill, I want to express in the strongest terms my dissatisfaction with the lax and nearly criminal enforcement of our banking laws that have led us to this juncture. Clearly, some of the problems in the industry resulted from adverse and unforeseeable economic conditions; but the major share of the current crisis is attributable to incompetence, mismanagement, and outright fraud. Year after year, while the FSLIC's losses continued to mount, Federal regulators refused to take the necessary action to bring the problem under control.

As a result, the American taxpayer is being stuck with a huge tab for a party to which most of them were not invited. My constituents did not get to attend dinners at which antelope and lion were served, nor did they work in offices decorated with priceless works of art, not did they fly around the country and around the world in corporate jets. Nevertheless, they will now have to pay the bill for fixing the system.

I am pleased that every effort was made under the bill to recover the cost of the savings and loan rescue from those who created the problem. The bill provides additional funds for the Justice Department to pursue and prosecute those whose irresponsibility and criminal conduct caused the crisis. The legislation increases the criminal penalties for crimes such as bribery, embezzlement, false bookkeeping, making false reports to bank regulators, and bank fraud to $1 million and 20 years imprisonment. I particularly support provisions of the bill that require assets gained through serious misconduct at financial institutions to be forfeited to the Government. Most importantly, the bill reforms the regulatory structure governing the thrift industry, to ensure that past abuses do not occur again in the future.

On balance, it is clear we must pass the bill. While I deplore the circumstances that made the legislation necessary, it is essential to provide an effective solution to the present problem in the thrift industry and strengthen banking regulations and penalties to ensure that the situation does not recur.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I am among those Members who have tried to focus attention on this miserable problem for a very long time now.

Yesterday I took the well indicating my opposition to the bill before the House. I was concerned about the housing provisions. I was distressed with the inclusion of some of the community reinvestment aspects. The right of first refusal provisions are troubling.

The funding is in my view perhaps inadequate, and I say to my colleagues that it is very easy around here to vote no and avoid the responsibilities.

However, Mr. Speaker, last night the funding mechanism was materially improved, and I say to my colleagues that this is not a perfect bill. However it is a better bill than it was, and, sooner or later, all of us have to sit down to a banquet of consequences, and this is our turn.

Mr. Speaker, this is the reason that I am going to support this conference report, because there simply is no responsible alternative. I will support the report. I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOAGLAND], a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am first to acknowledge that I am new to this body. I have only been here for a little over 7 months.

I still have a great deal to learn about the savings and loan crises, even though I am on the Banking Committee.

But people from Nebraska, my home State would simply shake their heads over this financing scheme. They would think it was concocted on Mars.

It unnecessarily adds billions of dollars in financing costs.

It puts the money off-budget, so the deficits will not appear in the 1990 or 1991 fiscal year figures.

It defeats, it does not advance, the purposes of Gramm-Rudman, by further hiding the true size of the deficit.

It simply does not make sense.

And I cannot in good conscience support it.

I was elected to be part of the solution, not part of the problem.

So let us roll up our sleeves once again. I know we'd all like to go home to our families, to our districts. But let us go home proud of an honest approach at solving this problem.

Let us go back to conference, do this financing provision right, and complete a bill that is excellent in every respect.

STATEMENT CONCERNING THE DECISION MADE BY THE HOUSE-SENATE CONFERENCE THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 3

Mr. Speaker, we have had an opportunity to reflect now for over 20 hours on the agreement reached in conference last night shortly before 11 p.m. between the House and Senate representatives.

I attended the conference last night, listened to the debate, and with all due respect to the chairman and conferees, I must oppose the conference report. And I do so with great reluctance, because most of the bill is directed toward solving the problems that created the mess we are in today.

But the financing provision the conference agreed to is simply unacceptable. In one stroke it sweeps $50 billion of new debt under the carpet, so that it will be hidden from the people, so it will not be shown as part of the 1990 and 1991 deficits.

I was not elected to do that. I was elected to carry to the Congress, a message of fiscal responsibility. That is how we Nebraskans approach these problems. We believe in balanced budgets in Nebraska. We simply don't accept this kind of smoke and mirrors approach to solving our fiscal problems back home.

As we know, the conference decided to place $20 billion of the funds in fiscal year 1989 and $30 billion distributed between fiscal years 1990 and 1991.

I am troubled by the decision to place any money in the 1989 fiscal year. The Gramm-Rudman snapshot date for fiscal year 1989 has long since past. By putting the funds into fiscal year 1989, we are busting the 1989 budget by an additional $20 billion and violating the spirit of the Gramm-Rudman prohibitions.

I believe it is a serious mistake to do that.

I do not believe it is fair to the process or to the taxpayers to simply add $20 billion to the national debt in this fashion.

The 1989 fiscal year, of course, will come to a close at the end of September. If we pass this bill today, it will probably not be signed by the President until mid-August. That means the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will have to raise and commit $20 billion in the last 6 weeks of the fiscal year. Maybe FDIC can do that productively and efficiently without wasting any tax dollars. I have serious questions.

The second aspect of the plan which also concerns me deals with the $30 billion to be spent in fiscal 1990 and 1991. Under the conference agreement, the funds are to be distributed over those 2 years in amounts that can be most efficiently used by the FDIC. But those funds are to be raised through the quasi-public, quasi-private corporation by the issuance of 30-year bonds at interest rates higher than similar paper issued by the Treasury Department.

Not one nickel of the principal of those loans will appear on the Federal budget in 1990 and 1991. Those borrowings will be swept under the rug, as if they did not exist, merely as an asterisk in some Government document somewhere. The Gramm-Rudman budget balancing law will be avoided because the $30 billion in borrowing will be placed off budget instead of on budget. And at a cost of $3 billion in extra interest over the 30 years all or more so those funds will not have to appear on the administration's deficit sheets.

This is an equally serious slight of hand tactic as putting funds into the 1989 fiscal year. The appropriate thing to do, the honest thing to do, is to put all of these items on budget subject to public scrutiny for each fiscal year.

But the most fundamental objection I have to this entire plan is the fact that we are not placing all $50 billion on budget and on Gramm-Rudman.

There is no reason we cannot find the funds in a $1.1 trillion annual Federal budget to fund this bailout now. If we did it in this fashion, by cuts or revenue enhancements, or a combination of both, we would save all of the interest charges, now estimated to exceed $100 billion.

In other words, let us pay for the bill now. Let us put what we need to put on the 1990 and 1991 budgets, perhaps in the range of $23 billion a year, and find that money elsewhere, even let sequestration take place if need be.

It simply does not make sense to say that we cannot find $23 billion in the 1990 fiscal year budget of over $1.1 trillion. This is the only approach that makes sense. We have to stop shooting ourselves in the feet on these budgetary matters.

So in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should roll up our sleeves and go back to conference. We should iron out the financing provisions in a fashion that will place the deficits out for all to see and which will save billions of dollars in interst expenses. Then we can pass this landmark bill of which we can be proud.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strongest support for this conference report, and I urge a yes vote on a crisis that this Congress has been, all of us have been, dragging our feet on for the last 3 years. The time is long overdue to begin to resolve the savings and loan crisis that has plagued this Nation for over 3 years now, to resolve it on behalf of the depositors, of the savers, of the borrowers, of the home buyers of this country. It is time to pass this bill, and pass it tonight, and to delay no longer.

Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons. First of all, the bill is not perfect, but it is a good bill. The bill gets the job done. Oh, anybody in this body can find one of some 900 legislative pages, 1 page or 2 pages of something they disagree with, but the fact is the bill gets the job done. It closes the insolvent thrifts. It insures the depositors, and that is what it is really all about. We are here to talk about protecting depositors with their money in savings accounts and in checking accounts in banks and savings and loans throughout this country, the deposits that are today only insured in name only and, in fact, with no funds behind it.

Mr. Speaker, it reforms this system. It provides for increased capital standards, for tangible assets; for insurance, an insurance fund that can act like an insurance fund and protect against activities that are unsafe and unsound.

The financing scheme has been spoken of, and I heard the gentleman from Wisconsin, but the fact is that there are two different approaches to a financing scheme, and they both get to the same place. Oh, one side says that over 30 years one will cost $4 billion and the other, but the other side says, the Secretary of the Treasury says, that that approach will cost $7 billion more than the other one over that same 30-year period.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that both financing schemes work. They both have the funds repaid by the same savings and loans and banks, and ultimately in some part the taxpayers, and they both in fact will provide insurance for the funds and will save depositors.

Vote yes tonight. The alternatives are unthinkable.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I must rise in opposition to the conference report, and I do so fully aware that much good work and hard work has gone into this report.

However, Mr. Speaker, I simply cannot support the final funding measure contained in this bill.

I supported the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE] earlier this year along with 170 of my colleagues which would have put the cost of the savings and loan bailout on budget and subject to Gramm-Rudman. Had the President and the Congress agreed to that procedure, it would have saved the American taxpayers some hundred and fifty billion dollars, but, as my colleagues know, the President and the Congress rejected that approach and agreed to what we are doing here this evening.

The fallback position then became putting the funding on budget, but exempt from Gramm-Rudman limits. This approach would have saved the taxpayers at least $5 billion, and probably $20 billion when we take into consideration the debt management costs involved.

My colleagues, we have fallen back even further, and in my judgment too far. This conference committee report will cost the taxpayers at least $3 billion in increased interest payments compared to the House-passed, on-budget plan that passed this body on June 15 with 320 of our colleagues supporting it.

Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no sensible reason to deal with this problem off budget. Any suggestion that to have this bailout on budget will undermine the Gramm-Rudman limits stands common sense on its head. After all, my colleagues, Gramm-Rudman is the law of the land. It cannot be amended without the President's signature. The Gramm-Rudman limits cannot be avoided without the President's approval. So, any suggestion by the President and by the Secretary of the Treasury that we are running a big freight train through Gramm-Rudman is absolutely ridiculous unless, of course, the President wants to change Gramm-Rudman himself. And I guess when I listen to the President that I cannot help but think that he may be afraid of himself on this particular issue.

So, my colleagues, this is the biggest issue this Congress is going to deal with. We should pay for it. We should be up front with the American taxpayers and not pass the bills on to our kids.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today in a letter signed by four prominent committee chairmen we were urged to vote no on this bill, and we were told "additional costs would reach $20 billion when debt management costs were included."

The $20 billion figure is a just little bit exaggerated. CBO, in a letter to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] of June 9, 1989, and which I will put in the RECORD later, said of the alleged additional costs that:

> In our view the three factors you identified in your letter do not significantly affect the amount of savings when measured in present value terms.

So much for the $20 billion.

Now, with respect to the $3 billion, listen to what Chairman Alan Greenspan said to Senator GRAMM in his letter of July 12, which I put in the RECORD yesterday:

> Little more than $1 billion invested in U.S. Treasuries will finance through interest and amortization the expected nominally higher interest cost on REFCORP bonds relative to on-budget Treasury obligations. This is a small "insurance premium for better budget discipline, which would avoid ultimately greater costs."

Mr. Speaker, tonight we have a compromise. Nearly, half, or about 40 percent, of these bonds are going to be sold and accounted for as the way the House wants to handle them. About 60 percent are going to be done the way the President wanted to deal with them.

I do not like the solution. Neither does anybody else. But it is a true compromise and compromises are always a bit awkward.

The truth is that there is no good financing solution when the taxpayers have got to pony up $50 billion worth of bonds. But we are doing the best we can. What we have done in this solution is make use of a couple of old well-used loopholes, instead of deciding to punch a brand new unprecedented loophole. We avoided that dangerous precedential loophole by not waiving Gramm-Rudman. That's why the bill passes muster.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a vote for the bill. It is absolutely essential.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, June 9, 1989.

Hon. CHARLES E. SCHUMER,
Chairman, Task Force on Urgent Fiscal Issues, Committee on the Budget, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am pleased to respond to your request that the Congressional Budget Office evaluate and estimate certain incremental costs that may be associated with off-budget financing of savings and loan resolutions. Your letter mentioned three types of costs: (1) additional interest costs resulting from the use of long-term debt rather than Treasury's selection of maturities; (2) Treasury's additional interest costs on the borrowings needed to finance the extra cost of REFCORP securities; and (3) the administrative and issuing expenses of REFCORP. I will discuss each of these separately.

DEBT MATURITY

Mr. Bert Ely, in his testimony before your task force, indicated that one of the advantages of Treasury financing would be the flexibility to use short-maturity Treasury bills rather than the 30-year REFCORP bonds anticipated in the Administration's plan. He suggested that by using short-term financing for several years, and then shifting to long-term Treasury bonds when low-term rates are presumably lower, the Treasury would save billions of dollars in interest costs.

CBO believes that there is no clear basis for projecting such savings, because the Treasury does not manage the debt in the way that Mr. Ely suggests. That is, the Treasury does not seek to minimize interest costs by shifting large amounts of borrowing among different maturities. Rather, it borrows funds using a wide range of maturities, from three months to 30 years. In managing the debt, the Treasury tries to balance many objectives, taking into account its significant influence on the financial markets resulting from the large size of its offerings and its access to information on future government policies. It has particularly emphasized regularity and predictability. While short-term financing might appear superior on occasion, the Treasury has generally avoided excessive reliance on it, because such debt must be constantly refinanced and heightens the budget's vulnerability to interest rate fluctuations.

While the Treasury borrows in every maturity, it has met the bulk of its financing needs since the early 1980s by selling medium- and long-term securities. Annual totals vary, but the Treasury has typically met about three-fifths of its net marketable financing needs in maturities of five years or more (and about one-third in maturities of 20 to 30 years). For the first seven months of fiscal year 1989, about three-fourths of Treasury's net market borrowing has been in maturities of five years or more. The Treasury has said on many occasions that it seeks to continue lengthening the maturity of the federal debt. (In any event, since the Treasury does not auction debt for specific programs or purposes, it would be impossible even after the fact to scribe specific Treasury issues to the savings and loan legislation.)

There is some question as to whether the Treasury, if it tried, could successfully reduce interest costs by guessing future interest rates and shifting its financing mix accordingly. As a rule, though, it doesn't try.

INTEREST ON INTEREST

CBO has estimated that under H.R. 1278, as reported by the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, the interest rates on REFCORP securities would exceed the rates on similar Treasury issues by 40 basis points in 1989, by 35 basis points in 1990, and by 30 basis points in 1991. On $50 billion in REFCORP securities, the additional interest costs would come to about $175 million a year. The added costs of the REFCORP securities would amount to $1.5 billion over the fiscal years 1989 through 1999, and such costs would continue to accrue through the year 2022.

In his testimony before your task force, Dr. David Jones pointed out that the Treasury would have to borrow in order to pay these additional costs, further increasing the government's interest costs. CBO estimates that over 1989-1999 period the government would incur another $0.7 billion in interest costs in order to finance the $1.5 billion in added outlays for the REFCORP securities.

While interest costs have become a major component of federal spending, we question how useful it is to measure a program's cost by including financing costs ad infinitum. The cost of dams, aircraft carriers, and the operations of government agencies are not usually measured by including their effect on interest on the public debt. Similarly, a home purchased for $100,000 may result in mortgage payments totaling $400,000 over 30 years, but the cost of that home is usually considered to be $100,000. Finally, the value of a dollar 20 or 30 years from now is vastly different from the value of a dollar today; thus, adding together a stream of dollars over many years produces a total that has little economic meaning.

A more meaningful measure of costs would be a discounted present value calculation, which measures the value today of a future stream of cash flows. Depending on the interest rate differential assumed and the discount rate used, we estimate that the use of REFCORP financing rather than Treasury debt would add between $1.5 billion and $2 billion, measured in 1990 dollars, to the cost of the savings and loan legislation.

ADMINISTRATIVE AND ISSUING EXPENSES

Administrative and issuance costs necessitated by the creation of REFCORP would be negligible in comparison to the other costs involved in the savings and loan legislation. REFCORP would have no employees of its own; its functions would be performed by employees of the Federal Home Loan Banks and its administrative costs would be covered by the banks. Issuance costs would also be small. For example, the Financing Corporation (FICO) in its first 16 months of existence (through December 31, 1988) issued $5.85 billion worth of bonds and incurred issuance and custodial costs totaling less than $0.8 million. Such costs for $50 billion in REFCORP bonds would probably amount to several million dollars, mostly in the next three years.

Dealer concession fees would be more substantial, but they are encompassed by the interest rate spreads assumed for the REFCORP bonds relative to Treasury issues. (About 5-6 basis points of the spread are probably attributable to such fees.) Such costs are therefore already reflected in our estimate of the added interest costs for the REFCORP bonds.

CONCLUSION

CBO believes that the government would save money by financing the savings and loan resolutions through Treasury borrowing rather than REFCORP bonds, because funds could be raised more quickly and at lower interest rates. In our view, the three factors you identified in your letter do not significantly affect the amount of the savings when measured in present value terms.

If you wish further information on these matters, we will be pleased to provide. The CBO staff contact is Robert Sunshine, who can be reached at 226-2860.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM,
Washington, DC, July 12, 1989.

Hon. PHIL GRAMM,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: I am responding to your request of July 11 for my views on the method of financing of the savings and loan rescue plan—in particular, whether I favor the House or Senate budgetary treatment provision. Let me begin by saying that I have and continue to support the position of the Administration on this matter as expressed recently by Secretary Brady. In other words, I favor the Senate version.

In my judgment, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (G-R-H) budget process has been very useful in exerting discipline on the federal budget and, more fundamentally, on the federal government's claim on economic resources. We should not at this time threaten that process by setting a precedent that might be used in the future to underline necessary fiscal discipline. The outlays authorized in this bill are not a new commitment. Rather, they reflect the realization of liabilities that have been accumulating over several years in association with the federal government's pledge to preserve the balances of insured depositors. Thus, I do not believe that financing these outlays through private industry borrowing violates the spirit of G-R-H.

The financing proposed by the Administration, and largely incorporated in the Senate bill, poses less risk than on-budget financing, with an exemption from G-R-H, that budgetary discipline will be weakened in the future. The establishment of a separate corporate funding entity using private sector funds would be difficult to replicate should there be an attempt to circumvent G-R-H budgetary discipline in the future. In the contract, treating such financing on-budget with an exemption could easily be followed again and would be more of a temptation for those who wish to avoid the hard budgetary choices that must be made.

Little more than $1 billion invested in U.S. Treasuries will finance through interest and amortization the expected nominally higher interest cost on REFCORP bonds relative to on-budget Treasury obligations. This is a small "insurance" premium for better budget discipline, which would avoid ultimately greater costs.

I should also mention that the Administration's off-budget financing plan ensures that the S&L industry will shoulder a continuing share to the cost of clean-up. It has been rather widely agreed that the industry should appropriately be expected to contribute to the resolution of the problem, with the size of the industry's contribution limited by what it can reasonably afford. The details of the Administration's plan reflect this understanding and ensure that industry resources remain committed to this purpose. Thus, there is no danger that this portion of the resolution costs will in the end be shifted to the taxpayer as there is under the House approach in which the industry's contribution could be given back to the industry.

I hope that you find these comments to be helpful as you attempt to complete work on this most important piece of legislation.

Sincerely,

ALAN GREENSPAN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has 10½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has 11½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE], a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, there are many good points about this legislation. There are many flaws in it. Unfortunately, I believe there are two flaws that are fatal. One has to do with the question of borrowing or not borrowing.

You see, most everyone in this body has discussed on budget or off budget. That is all the media have reported. I do not want to say that is a phony issue, but it is not all that relevant. What is relevant is whether we are going to borrow the totality of the amount or we are going to pay for it ourselves. If we borrow the money, we foist this problem on our children and grandchildren. There was no compromise on that.

This bill today foists the totality of the cost on our children and grandchildren. In my judgment, that is fiscally irresponsible and morally irresponsible and a fatal flaw.

But there is a second fatal flaw dealing with the financing. The Rules Committee, unfortunately, did not even permit this body to consider the question of whether there should be some modest State contribution toward the cost of solving this problem.

The Northeast-Midwest coalition wanted to offer an amendment to this bill which would have permitted some modest State contribution. You see, we have a system of dual sovereignty. We have a dual banking system. About 75 to 80 percent of the costs of the problem we are confronted with have come about because of the problem of State-chartered institutions operating under the auspices of unbelievably permissive State law, unbelievably permissive state regulation, and either nonexistent or minimalist State supervision.

We were precluded from offering such an amendment. As a result, the taxpayers, especially from the Northeast-Midwest, will be sending a mammoth amount of their resources primarily to the Southwest. We should be contributing significantly toward that effort, but there should be some State contribution. There is none. That, too, is a fatal flaw. Those two fatal flaws require, mandate rejection.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER].

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I will speak initially to my colleagues on the Republican side. Last evening when the President indicated that he would veto the bill that was on the floor yesterday, that gave many of my Republican colleagues an excuse to vote no. If you are looking for an excuse to vote no on this bill, there are 800 pages of excuses to vote no; but I would say to you this is not an optional piece of legislation. This is not the catastrophic health care bill of 1989. This is a piece of legislation that if we do not pass, the costs only go higher; the cost of uncertainty, the cost of indecision, the cost of further bankruptcies, the cost of further S&L's having to be closed down. We must pass this bill.

Several years ago if we had passed the $15 billion recap bill, we probably would not be faced with this vote tonight, but the fact is we got up to the precipice of that vote and we blinked and would not vote for that $15 billion recap. Now we have this vote tonight. If we blink and do not vote affirmatively tonight, 1 month from now, 6 months from now, we will vote again on a bill that will have much higher costs, that will dwarf the $1 or $3 or $5 billion of savings that come, whether or not it is on-budget or off-budget.

So I urge my colleagues on the Republican side to vote yes. Give a solid vote for this.

To my colleagues on the Democratic side, there is not that much savings that come from on-budget, even in the most optimistic scenario, and if the optimistic scenario is wrong, if the Secretary of the Treasury is correct, if the President is correct, instead of saving 25 basis points on $30 billion of financing, or about $3 billion over 30 years, instead we will pay higher interest costs on $2.5 trillion.

My colleagues, vote yes. It is the vote to cast this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has 10½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has 9½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, if my arithmetic is correct, the opponents have as much time as we do.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The order in which the Members may close will be the gentleman from Illinois first, the gentleman from Ohio second, and the gentleman from Texas last.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, since that is the order and we have the right to close, I would suggest that our distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee proceed and use up a little bit of his time. He has more time than we have.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman——

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, we are ready to accept any leftover time the gentleman can give us now.

We have equal time, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the Members and the managers that each has the right to reserve one speech each for the closing.

The gentleman from Texas, if he wishes, can reserve all that time at this time and make one speech of 10½ minutes, or he can reserve any part of it until the end of the debate.

If the gentleman from Ohio wishes to do that, he may reserve all of his time to immediately precede the gentleman from Texas. At that point, the gentleman from Illinois would have to expend all of his time in one statement.

The right of the gentleman from Texas will be preserved to end the debate with any amount of time the gentleman wishes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair. I was merely seeking symmetry in the arrangement.

The SPEAKER. Unfortunately, the rules do not guarantee symmetry.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I am highly honored to yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in the most reluctant support of the conference report.

I would urge my colleagues to consider, first of all, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], is eminently correct in the criticisms which he makes with regard to the theory of the legislation before us; but issues go beyond that, and that is that we have to settle finally the questions which exist with regard to the failures of the savings and loans, and to commence moving forward toward a resolution of this question.

I would tell my colleagues that I join the gentleman from Illinois in urging my colleagues to vote against this measure, and at the time that that went on there were matters not only of the theory but also matters which related to other questions such as questions of protection of investors, exemption from registration of securities, which I believe should be registered in the interests of protecting the investors of this Nation. Those questions have been addressed.

I believe that it is time for us to pass the legislation, even though I believe it would have been better done in other forms, and to send the matter to the President so that we can get about the business of cleaning up the mess that exists with regard to the savings and loan situation in this country.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce for making a very tough decision, and I am very pleased that he is supporting this bill.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I stood in this well and, like my friend from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS], argued against this measure, but today I am just as strongly in favor of it as I was opposed to it yesterday.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE] said maybe the issue of Gramm-Rudman and the budget in question is not the major concern here. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that we look at some of the statements which were made in this well yesterday by a number of our colleagues. My good friend, who worked long and hard on this bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], said "a tough bill, a tougher bill than anyone would have expected;" our colleagues, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA], said "Member of this House should be proud of the role this body played in devising this tough legislation. Delayed action is not in the taxpayers' best interest," and our friend, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], said "one of the best legislative products that has been put together on a tough issue."

The President stood up here and asked us on February 8 to, within 45 days, get legislation to his desk so that we would not continue to the tune of $10 to $40 million a day tapping the taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, I believe very much that we need to proceed with this action this evening and get this bill passed. So that we can end that unlimited drain.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not bailout a single S&L or S&L shareholder, it simply ensures that the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government is, as promised, behind those deposits up to $100,000. A vote against this bill abrogates our responsibility.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman yield? I think he should yield. The gentleman mentioned my name in debate this evening.

Mr. DREIER of California. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. That is why I am happy to yield.

Mr. KLECZKA. That was a statement made yesterday prior to the conference which the gentleman and I served on, before the taxpayers got an additional liability of some $3 billion, and I think that now the deal is changed. My colleague said a deal is a deal. The deal is off.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, the financing of this is all wrong. It should have been paid for by taxes, current taxes, a very small tax, but the President could not bring himself to say that word. So we have foisted upon our children and grandchildren an unconscionable debt of perhaps $100 to $200 billion which will perhaps never be paid, because we just are not very good at paying off any of our debts.

This is our responsibility, not their responsibility. This mistake was made during our watch, not their watch.

Yes, we owe to the country a good, sound banking system. Let us come to work and have a good, sound banking system, but do not foist off on the children and grandchildren of this Nation this unconscionable debt financed in an unconscionable manner off budget where it will cost at least $20 billion more on them, not us.

Have we lost our minds? Have we lost our conscience? Have we lost our backbone?

The Senate certainly acted that way without ever voting, and by unanimous consent left this place for us to hold the bag.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to one of the most hard-working and efficient members of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD].

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, most of the speeches made tonight have had to do with the on-budget, off-budget issue. Let me say that 6 months ago, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs was handed a challenge. We were handed a challenge to take the President's bill and do something with it, and we have.

Fifty-one Members of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs spent 100 hours, 50 hours in the subcommittee and 50 hours in the full committee, working on this bill. There are a lot of features about this bill. We were handed a mandate to do three or four important things. One is to see that this situation never happened again. We think that we have accomplished that. We were asked to recapitalize the savings and loan industry. I think we have done that. That is very, very important. We were asked to give regulators important enforcement powers so this could not happen again, and we did that. We added to that.

Members of our committee said they wanted to accommodate housing. We accommodated housing. Members of the committee said that they wanted to strengthen the Community Reinvestment Act, and we voted on it here, and we did that. Members of the committee said that they wanted to strengthen the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act. We did that.

We accomplished the mandate and more.

I can understand the controversy on the on budget, off budget. That is understandable. We do have strong feelings about that, and I take nothing away from those who want one side of it or the other, but that cannot be the only issue that controls this bill.

A lot more goes into this bill than just the financing. It is only one part of where we have to go.

Mr. Speaker, it disappoints me tonight to see speaker on speaker come here downing this bill when we have done everything to accommodate their interests in the bill. I have seen one Member speak against it tonight when his State was specially singled out for a special project.

Yes, a lot of us have made valuable contributions, but, Mr. Speaker, let me just say this bill, this conference committee, deserves to be passed not because of one issue, but because of many issues, and the fact is we have tried to do the job that the U.S. citizens have asked us to do in this issue.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH].

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, if one were sitting on the Moon, what is impressive is not the differences that are being articulated but the similarities. After all, we are talking about the same amount of money, the same long-term bonding technique, and the conference report is a compromise between the Republican and Democratic approaches.

As for the savings involved, the conclusions can only be described on both sides as conjectural. The majority party properly points out that their approach is more flexible and possibly may save $1 to $3 billion. The Republican Party points out that the administration's approach, which is three-fifths on Gramm-Rudman, will involve in the future less total governmental borrowing and, therefore, lower interest rates for such borrowing; it also will not set the precedent of Congress stepping off Gramm-Rudman with each emergency it faces. The Republicans in the White House suggest their approach my save money.

In essence, therefore, what this debate is all about is setup argumentation, the question of whether the Republican approach to solving the problem is the root difficulty in the bill, and here at the most a $1 billion to $3 billion conjecturing finger can be pointed at President Bush, or whether a Congress controlled largely by the majority party and an administration controlled by a former President is responsible for precipitating the problem, and here the figures are 100 to 400 times greater, that is, in the $100 billion to $400 billion range.

In conclusion, I would stress that all approaches to financing are uncomfortable. The approach of the conference committee is not a compelling reason to support or oppose this bill, just a reason to escape making disciplined judgment on what really matters, whether this bill is adequate to deal with the full scope of the greatest legislative mistake of this century.

Finally, let me just conclude by commending a first-term President in the White House for stepping up and dealing with the problem, and a first-term chairman of the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs for being so forthcoming in his response.

This is a very decent-hearted approach. All of us have our own judgment on the final outcome, but please, let us not make it based upon the funding compromise that the conference committee wrought.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my remarks this evening to my Democratic colleagues. You have been sold out by your leadership. Vote "no."

You will be here on Thanksgiving being asked to vote for capital gains.

We have had whimpering: on budget, off budget. Tonight you are off budget.

Let me tell my colleagues, they are being asked why? So they can go home and to go home quickly.

It is a $3 billion ticket home, and I want to say it is a $190 ticket to Oakland, CA. Here is 3 billion bucks. For my constituents I will stay and work out a fair compromise for the American people, and I want my colleagues to join with me in voting no.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT. Mr. Speaker, I did not spend 100 hours, as some of the Members of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee did, listening to testimony on this bill. But I want the Members of the House to know that I spent 20 years of my life in the banking business before I came to politics, and I can tell them, do not be deluded into thinking that capital makes financial institutions secure.

Capital does not make the institution secure. It is the confidence that those deposits will be made good when the little widow comes to withdraw her money from the bank. If the banker tells that widow that for her $100 she is assured that we are going to pay $3 tonight for her $100, do Members really think she is going to go home and sleep good? The answer is an absolute, unreserved no.

The thing that we have to be sure to do is to pass a bill tonight that does not bail out some financial institutions in this country, a few savings and loan institutions. What we are doing here tonight is restoring confidence to the entire financial institutions of this country.

Whatever way we decide to do it is going to take some compromise, sure. I have heard of two compromises tonight. One says that we can raise taxes. The other says we can float bonds.

We can cut expenditures, but I have not heard that discussed yet. There are at least three ways.

Politics is the art of compromise, and compromise has been reached tonight, and I think we ought to go ahead and vote on this bill tonight.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, it is really a shame that we are here. The President did not know a good deal when he had one. He decided to use the big veto threat. He should have signed the bill that his House passed before. It was a better bill.

It is too bad we have to be here. But now that we are here let us try to do the right thing.

The President's letter did not say anything about on budget or off budget. It said he wanted to save Gramm-Rudman.

This deal does nothing to save Gramm-Rudman. It is off budget all the way around. We missed Gramm-Rudman on the way in and we miss Gramm-Rudman on the way out.

We have to put it on budget if we are going to do something about the deficit, and we have to put it on budget if we are going to be honest about how we are going to pay for this.

Let me ask my Democratic colleagues to remember something. It was the Democrats who made this bill tough and strong, and there was a price. The price was on budget.

The President does not want to pay that price.

Mr. President, read my lips: not on budget, no bill.

Vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has 6½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, according to my calculation, I just yielded to two Members, and they have 9½ minutes left. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The time is divided under the rules which permits one-third of the time to be assigned to a Member opposing the conference report.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I just yielded to two Members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again inform the gentleman from Illinois that at such time as the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Ohio reserve all remaining time for final statements——

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, could I make an inquiry as to how many speakers the proponents have left?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time to close.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio reserves the balance of his time.

The gentleman from Texas reserves what balance of his time?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I, too, reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to how many speakers the gentleman has left?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Ohio are entitled to reserve one Member to speak. The gentleman from Ohio has one Member that he wishes to yield to for 3 minutes, is that correct?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I am going to use the time myself.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I believe if the gentleman from Illinois insists on knowing what we intend to do to divide our time, I would like to know how he is going to divide his time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. I already announced, Mr. Speaker, I have two speakers plus myself.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps it would be possible for the Chair to be informed as to how much time the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Texas wish to yield themselves. The gentleman from Texas is going to close debate.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve not less than half a minute to close. But I would also like to recognize some Members who wish to speak on this, and therefore I am trying to figure out how to divide that balance and still keep the commitment that we would have the final prerogative to close.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that. All I want to do is equally divide the debate. The proponents have 9½ minutes and I have 9 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will alternate, if the gentleman wishes, between the two of them.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I just yielded to two speakers in a row.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I believe in free and untrammeled debate, and it is not my intention, I am not trying to play games, I am just trying to preserve the arrangement, that is to where we will not unwittingly recognize Members and use all of our time.

So at this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR], a hardworking and longstanding member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

□ 1120

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think my leadership on the Banking Committee has failed me at all. I am proud of the work they did.

I want to compliment Chairman GONZALEZ, Chairman ANNUNZIO, the ranking members, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE]. I see Senator RIEGLE in the back. I want to compliment them for the work they did.

Let me tell you what is in this bill. The House Banking Committee installed top capital standards far superior to the administration, and we prevailed. The House Banking Committee installed criminal and enforcement penalties far superior to the President's bill, and we prevailed.

The House Banking Committee provided provisions against discrimination toward women and minorities, and we prevailed. The House Banking Committee installed consistent pay-fixing authority for all Federal regulatory agencies in order to retain and maintain talented supervisory staff, and we prevailed.

The House Banking Committee installed affordable housing provisions for the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. Speaker, the House gave the taxpayers one item which they deserved, a chance for home ownership, and we prevailed.

Mr. Speaker, the report of this conference contains many reforms and well deserved. But like any conference session and conference report, compromises are needed to move the legislation. I supported wholeheartedly the House provision requiring the on-budget financing. We have all heard all the economic arguments on why on budget is preferred. But, Mr. Speaker, this is costing, this problem, this crisis is costing $20 million a day to the taxpayers of our country. We cannot afford, my colleagues, if we do not support this conference report tonight all of the provisions that I have mentioned that the House really truly won on that were true reforms are going to be unraveled.

I say to some of my friends that you are going to see some of your provisions unraveled as well.

The overriding issue is that we must pass this conference report tonight.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], a member of the committee.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I think everybody in this Chamber, in fact everyone in this building, Democrat, Republican, Congressman, Senator, supporter and opponent of this bill will agree that this is a sad evening, an evening where we should not have to be here. This bill, which has shown Congress at its best, which has had a noble way as it wended its way through Congress, has come to this sad ending.

Mr. Speaker, I respect the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], and the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

I have worked long and hard and side by side with them to make this a tough and a good bill. But the sad truth is that while this is a good bill, by just a small bit of resolve we can make it better. And that is the issue before us here tonight.

For the bill before us tonight is considerably worse than the bill we voted on yesterday. It is worse because the compromise, the on/off-budget compromise, is unworkable, it is jerrybuilt, it is less honest and most of all it costs the taxpayers money, $3 billion to $30 billion.

It is bad enough that we have to ask the taxpayers to spend $150 billion to bail out the depositors, but it is obscene, obscene, my colleagues, to vote for an additional $3 billion to $30 billion out of the taxpayers' pockets to simply allow the President, simply because the President does not want the public to know what the real budget deficit is.

My colleagues, should we blink every time the President throws down a veto message, a veto message that comes at the last minute and most importantly a veto message that is substantively wrong?

My colleagues, this is a good bill, but by voting "no" tonight, we can make it better, we can make it more honest and we can make sure that we do not spend $3 billion simply to satisfy the President's whim.

Vote "no" tonight.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has 4 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has reserved his 3 remaining minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 7 minutes remaining.

Does the gentleman from Texas desire to yield time?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I take great pride and it is quite a privilege to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, of course I rise in support of the conference, with a heavy heart. I heard a lot of arguments tonight. I think they are the arguments that should have been made and were made 6 weeks ago, were made yesterday. You know, we have done, I think, the Banking Committee and the conference on this have done a good job. We kept faith with the House. Eighty or ninety percent of the provisions that we passed are in this bill.

We kept faith with regard to the on/offbudget issue. In fact, we pushed it yesterday, we ran that string out.

We got the letter from the President. We are willing to try and call his bluff. But the fact is we never got there, we did not get to second base because the Senate stopped us on the budget waiver and on, perhaps, a cloture vote and in other ways.

So we cannot do it. Now we are back. The question is whether we are going to resolve this problem.

That is why we are sent here, my colleagues, to resolve problems. I know a lot of you would probably like to see this bill with you voting against it all the way, but that is not why we are here. This is an unpleasant task, this is not easy, it is not pleasant for any of us.

But I suggest to you that the President is serious when he says he is going to veto it. The Senators were serious when they did not waive the budget resolution. We kept faith.

I think it is up to us now to bite our teeth, to grit our teeth now, to deal with the subjects that are unpleasant and to pass this. That is why we are where we are at. I did not vote with the majority last night in terms of the type of budget treatment. But that passed. And we are here today. Yesterday's arguments are not good enough. We have to face up to the issue today and we have to be prepared to address and tackle this particular problem.

The savings of the people in the financial institutions and across this country. We cannot go home without solving that. We will not go home without solving it, but it will be a compromise tonight or a compromise you do not like next week. There are all sorts of reasons Members ask, always find reasons in a bill like this to vote against it.

I suggest we look to the positive and look to vote for the job we were sent here, and vote for this tonight.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on the Budget [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I think all Members regret that we have to have this fight at this late hour over this bill. Each Member will have to weigh the merits of the bill first as the financing mechanism that is now included in the proposal. For me, as chairman of the Committee on the Budget, the issue is very simple: What saves the most money for the taxpayers? This is not a battle over which approach avoids Gramm-Rudman. Very frankly, both approaches avoid Gramm-Rudman. This is not a battle over which one sets a bad precedent. Frankly, both would set a bad precedent.

The issue comes down to two questions: What approach will expedite aid to depositors the fastest; which approach saves the taxpayers the most money? The overwhelming evidence, the indisputable evidence, is that putting it on budget will do exactly that. It will expedite aid to the depositors within 2 to 3 weeks, and it will save anywhere from $3 to $20 billion. I know we have a responsibility, a responsibility tonight to stand by the Deposit Insurance System in the savings and loans, but we have a greater responsibility to conduct the financial operations of the Government in the most cost effective way, and the way that makes the most effective use of market conditions. That is the on-budget approach.

The administration wants Members to pay more to hide more. I will not be a party to that. Over the last few weeks we have spilled blood on this floor over 13 appropriation bills, fighting for funds for space, for defense, for housing, for nutrition. We cannot now take the approach that we are not going to care about saving billions of dollars. There is a right way to do the financing in this bill and there is a wrong way to do it. The right way, the honest way, the smart approach is to do what the House overwhelmingly voted to do just a few weeks ago by a 2 to 1 margin: Put the financing on budget and keep it off the backs of our children. Vote against this conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] has 2 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WYLIE] has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, as I expect to close. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas have any more speakers?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I have 2 minutes left; I would like to ask my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], if he would be willing to allow me 1 minute to close so I could yield 2 minutes to another member of the committee.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman making a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. The question of the gentleman from Texas was to the gentleman from Illinois as to whether the gentleman from Illinois would yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas.

I think the answer of the gentleman from Illinois is in the negative.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, in that case, I will ask my distinguished colleague on the minority side.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, is it possible for me to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may yield 1 minute of his time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve 2 minutes to close and yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of closing, do I understand I will be protected on that 1 last minute?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state its understanding. The Chair's understanding is that the gentleman from Texas will yield 2 minutes to a Member. The gentleman from Texas will then have no time remaining. The gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for 4 minutes. The gentleman from Ohio will be recognized for 2 minutes and then will yield 1 minute remaining of his time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to yield 2 minutes to our distinguished, hard-working brilliant member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, we have heard some fascinating speeches here tonight. My friend from California ripped up his ticket. My friend from Iowa said that he was against the bill last night, and I think he is still against the bill tonight, but everybody else should be for the bill. My friend from New York says it is good work and it could be better. I agree. It is good. It could be better.

However, the only way it could be better, you and I would have to have faith in the U.S. Senate. So every Member who believes that, those Members can make a good bill better by trusting in the resolve and courage and conviction of the U.S. Senate, those Members should vote no and pray. Maybe, Mr. Speaker, and I do not mean the Senate sent Members an example tonight, saying by unanimous consent we will not have a rollcall, and let the House stand up and be heard. I wish I had the faith of my colleagues in the Senate. However, I do not.

The President did not veto this bill, and the President has not distinguished himself tonight or last night. However, he never got the bill. The jello never bounced it over to him. The fact is that it did not pass the Senate before, and it will not pass the Senate again. I wish the Senate were different. I wish I were taller, and I could eat more and not gain weight.

The fact is, we are where we are. If we do not pass a good bill tonight, and I agree with the gentleman from New York we did a lot to make it a good bill, tough on capital standards, toughest regulations for businesses, which many of my Democratic friends will get a chance to vote for, better for poor people on low development housing, and people over there are swallowing and not talking about it, and wish it was not there. If we go back to conference, I do not guarantee it will stay. Perhaps we should have had this debate outside, and my colleagues would wish upon a star that in the Senate they would be better. Even so, I do not have that much hope, this late at night. I vote yes because it is a good bill. It is not the best bill, but it is the best we can do. I am not ripping up my ticket.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this conference report.

This conference report does not reflect the will of a strong majority of the House with respect to the issue of on-budget financing. On June 15 the House voted by an overwhelming 2-to-1 margin to place the financing on budget. Because of the Budget Act, a minority in the other body is frustrating the will of a bipartisan majority of the House.

According to CBO projections, this conference report will increase the burden of the American taxpayer because of higher borrowing costs by over $3 billion over the next 30 years. In addition, several financial experts have estimated that an off-budget bailout similar to the conference report being considered today, will increase taxpayer costs by an additional $20 to $30 billion. The reason for this additional cost is due to the off-budget corporation's lack of flexibility in managing its debt.

Yesterday I praised the Bush administration for addressing the savings and loan problem and swiftly recommending a proposal to the Congress. The administration should have accepted yesterday's conference report. For most of us and for most of our States, this legislation produces very little benefit. Taxpayers in all States are being asked to shoulder most of the cost to bailout the problems in a few.

I predict that the administration will be back in 2 or 3 years asking for additional dollars to bailout insolvent thrifts. And I hope to be here—here in this well with today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—reminding the administration of this terrible off-budget precedent and urging my colleagues to vote "no" again. If we don't draw the line today, soon everything will be off-budget—we'll be fighting drugs off-budget—fighting crime off-budget—we'll be going to Mars off-budget.

For this administration not to be concerned about the additional cost it is imposing on taxpayers—your constituents and mine—is simply intolerable. In the conference last night, I and many of my colleagues were willing to consider alternatives to the financing plan as long as it remained on budget. In the spirit of President Bush's veto letter, we were willing to put the financing on budget and with no waiver of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. That would have been far more honest than the off-budget sham contained in the conference report. Those suggestions were rejected out of hand in favor of the administration's budgetary shell game.

The administration's insistence on this off-budget financing scheme will be a precedent cited by many Members of Congress as difficult budgetary issues present themselves in the future, such as financing the war on drugs, nuclear waste cleanup and catastrophic health insurance. This is an administration whose budget policy consists of slide by budgets, blue smoke and mirrors, and now off-budget financing.

I know all of us want to go home. However, I urge you to reject this conference report and stick around a few more hours. That's a small price for us to pay to save our constituents billions of dollars over the next several years.

I think that we owe the American taxpayers more than a headlong rush to recess. We owe them fiscal responsibility.

Billions of dollars can be saved with the minimal delay in affirming the original House decision, and I think it is worth the time.

My colleagues, there is a time to fold, and there is a time to be bold. There is a time to be wrong, and a time to be strong. There is a time to take flight, and a time to be right.

Our constituents know that our time is worth their money. I strongly urge upon my colleagues the rejection of this conference report.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] who spoke a little earlier said yesterday that this is a tough bill, a tougher bill than anyone could have expected. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON] said that it is one of the best legislative products that has been put together on a tough issue. So, each of these gentlemen are voting against it over the funding mechanism. There has been a representation made that it will cost $30 billion through this new compromise that we have come up with. The Treasury says that the compromise will cost approximately $75 million annually or $2.2 billion over 30 years in excess of the interest cost and that the present value of this is approximately $750 million.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not perfect. No compromise ever is. But it is the only responsible action we have at this point to take. Experts estimate that insolvent S&L's are losing $10 to $20 million a day, perhaps even as much as a billion dollars per month. This bill will provide the resources necessary to shut down those institutions, stop the hemorrhaging, stop the mounting losses.

We are not bailing out S&L's. We are not bailing out their stockholders or their managers. We are delivering on our promise that the Federal Government stands behind the safety and the life savings of millions of Americans.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill. It will restore and maintain confidence in our financial system.

The time is now, and I urge adoption of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] has struck the one thing I want to remind everybody. This is not a bailout. The bailout was done all last year. This is a workout. It is a workout of a dilemma that is confronting and jeopardizing the entire system of our financial institutions; depository institutions that is, and the insurance fund. Every one of my colleagues' constituents thinks, because it is pledged, that the full faith and credit of their deposits and their shares up to a hundred thousands is protected. That is lying to them. The insurance fund is broke.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will remedy that. That is why we have got to pass it.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] was correct. This is not a bailout. It is a workout of the hole that the Congress contributed to, and a lot of people did.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to close by saying this: I cannot begin to express my admiration, and my thanks and profound respect for the Senate conferees ably chaired by Senator RIEGLE. I know that it is easy to cuss them, but I will be remiss if I did not say that they worked beautifully. So did our Members on our conference.

But above all I wish to recognize the yeoman work done by the staffs of both the minority and the majority.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in very reluctant support of the conference report on the savings and loans legislation.

The reason I will vote for the conference report is simply that it is necessary to move forward with this bill. This bill is to the thrift industry what Superfund is to the chemical industry. The longer we delay beginning the cleanup, the greater the risk created and the greater the ultimate cost. The last card has been played, the costs to the taxpayers of the bailout continue to mount on a daily basis, let's get on with it.

But I am far from enthusiastic. My reluctance about supporting this bill relates chiefly to the financing package. The administration position, which was yesterday upheld by the other body, is the sheerest hypocrisy.

The administration maintains that on-budget financing will violate the integrity of Gramm-Rudman. Gramm-Rudman's been violated in every way imaginable. We routinely slide pay dates around, and forward fund agriculture deficiency payments, and move trust funds on or off budget depending on whatever's convenient. We don't mind those transgressions, because they help make the deficit look smaller.

The administration's problem with the on-budget financing is that it will make the deficit look larger. Never mind that on-budget financing will save billions of dollars. The proponents of off-budget financing say the financial markets will be panicked if we exempt this refinancing package from Gramm-Rudman. The markets will think we have lost our resolve to reduce the deficit.

That's ridiculous. Will the markets be fooled by this off-budget mechanism into thinking we aren't really spending the money? Of course not. The Government of the United States is going to spend the money necessary to refinance the troubled savings and loans. It will be expensive, but that is our obligation, and we will meet it.

The compromise contained in this conference report is worse than the original House proposal, but it is better than the original administration financing plan. The time to pass the Financial Toxic Waste Cleanup Act of 1989 is now.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it clear as part of the RECORD as to why I voted against the savings and loan conference agreement in the waning hours before Congress left for its August district work period.

Early this year, the House voted overwhelmingly for its version of the savings and loan bill. In it, among other things such as tightening the control over the thrift industry so that history doesn't repeat itself, the House provided for an on-budget bailout, exempt under Gramm-Rudman. I voted for the original House bill.

First I would like to say why it was important to exempt the bill under Gramm-Rudman. If we had put $50 billion on budget without such an exemption, and when it came time to take a snapshot of the budget to determine how close Congress was to reducing the deficit by the targeted amounts for fiscal year 1990, we would have found that in order to get the $50 billion to pay for the S&L bailout, we would have to cut existing Federal programs by that amount. What that usually means is to cut domestic programs, such as educating the young, and feeding the poor. It seldom means cutting defense.

Allowing a one-time waiver of Gramm-Rudman is simply that. It does not mean that we have struck down Gramm-Rudman. It is a waiver such as Congress agrees to from time to time when it is necessary to move quickly and for a good reason that only a waiver would permit under the statutes.

Another reason for keeping the $50 billion on-budget is that it tells the American people that we are not trying to hide anything from them. Indeed, it may cost each American taxpayer $1,000 each, and they have a right to know that up front. What the House has said, in passing a bill that keeps the costs on-budget, and in passing a conference agreement that kept the costs on-budget, is that it says to America, we are not playing games. The House has acknowledged that this bailout still adds to the national debt, for which we are already borrowing in order to pay the national interest. The House even acknowledged that it's a cynical way to do business if you are concerned over budgetary discipline—and most of us are, and most of us are trying to live with Gramm-Rudman each year. But the House was also acknowledging that we cannot let the deposits of innocent taxpayers be lost because we failed to do something about bailing out the industry, tightening controls over them so that there is no future opportunity for this to happen again, and standing behind the Governments original promise and guarantee that their savings were insured by the FSLIC and were not subject to loss.

So what was the problem? In the last minutes and hours of the day we were forced to take final action on the S&L conference agreement so as to stop the massive drain on those institutions that are still solvent, the President precipitated a complete blackade to our "on-budget, Gramm-Rudman exempt" bailout bill by writing a letter to the Republican leadership of the House and Senate threatening to veto the bill if it came to him in that form, as agreed to by both House and Senate conferees.

It was not difficult for me to see the writing on the wall. We were not going to be able to win against a Senate effort, requiring 60 votes, to get a bill that was both on budget and exempt under Gramm-Rudman.

Senate Repubicans wanted it off budget because President Bush wanted it that way. President Bush wanted it that way because he doesn't ever want it to appear on his Record that his massive spending measure took place on his watch. Not the President of "read my lips, no new taxes" fame.

Also, by keeping it off budget and placing the borrowing in the hands of a newly created entity called REFCORP, we pretend that REFCORP is a private entity. As a private entity, it is no more subject to Gramm-Rudman than is General Motors or Chrysler. That is not exactly government in the sunshine, is it?

Even without the S&L bill, next year's budget process is going to be harsh. What kind of costs are we going to finally end up with using the newly created "private" entity called REFCORP? What kind of tax burden, over and above what we think we know the costs to be, are we creating for the next 30 years. I am not a fiscal conservative, but I am hesitant about giving this new Corporation control over not only the lives of my children, but of their children. We have all heard the figure of $1,000 per taxpaying citizen as the price to be paid for this bailout. I am not sure if that is all it is ever going to be.

We just now are beginning to try to find reasonable ways to reform, if not repeal, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act because of the public outcry from one segment of our population who would have to pay a surtax. They are saying no. What will the taxpayers say when they really get wind of this S&L recovery bill and all that it entails, including their expected contribution?

Is this "tax burden" going to be a one-time thing, or every year or so are we going to hear about the next $50 billion round upon which REFCORP will need congressional approval, because the bailout is going to cost more than we ever thought possible?

Once burned, twice shy. I voted for the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage bill, because I believed it was something that senior citizens needed, were anxious to have the Congress enact. I had it on very good authority from one of their highly respected representative groups, the AARP, that seniors would welcome it. But we all know what happened once they found out about a surtax charge.

The people in my State have been recently burdened by new taxes. This is a State which ranks 49th in the Nation in low per capita income. In my district alone, there are cities and towns where the unemployment rates are as high as 50 percent, certainly in many others the rate is double-digit. I cannot in good conscience vote for a bill, despite the fact that I voted for it the first time around, that I am becoming more and more unsure of every day. Do I want the industry to recover? Yes, I do. Does my State have similar thrift industry problems? No, it does not. The savings and loan institutions in West Virginia are considered to be the healthiest in the Nation. There are not many of them, but they stayed with the original mission established for such institutions, they provided home loans for people. Even when Congress deregulated the industry and allowed the risk-taking practices and high-rolling that led to the failure of so many institutions, West Virginia's industry stayed in the home loan business. Despite the fact that West Virginia's institutions stayed fairly pure in times when anything was possible for them and their directors, they are going to bear the recapitalization burdens imposed on all such thrifts in this bill. They too are losing the goodwill which a few of West Virginia's institutions have as part of their assets, because all thrifts are losing the right to count goodwill beyond 1995.

If there was only one reason allowed to a Member for voting for the bill, mine would be to make the funds available to the Justice Department to prosecute those individuals who lived high on the hog while the people's investments went down the tube, and FSLIC insurance with it.

This bill will at least do that much—prosecute and punish those most responsible for outrageous personal gains made at the expense of the small investor, the family who put their life savings into a thrift account.

I want to restore the faith of the American public in the thrift industry. I want the drain on the thrift industry to stop; also, I don't want the current mistrust of S&L's to spill over to banks where depositors are covered by the FDIC Insurance Guarantee.

But I want to go on record saying that I am opposed to taking $30 billion of this bailout off budget. I want my constituents to remember that the House has twice voted to keep it on budget. All of it, not just part of it.

The conference agreement first approved by the House on August 3 was adopted by a very narrow margin. The more than 100 Republicans who voted for the first passage of the bill, fell to a miserly 39 Republicans in passing the conference report with the House on-budget plan in it. They did so so that the Senate could renege on the deal that their own conferees had made with House conferees to keep this bill on budget.

Why should I vote for a conference agreement that even as we voted to pass it, the House conferees were thinking of the "compromise" to an off-budget bill?

When I learned yesterday that the President had written his veto-threat letter to both House and Senate Members, I suddenly got tired of all the rhetoric we've heard recently about how the President was working so closely with the Congress on this legislation. The conferees on this bill, on both sides of the Capitol, were totally disciplined in the sense that they not only held fast to the notion that we had to impose severe restraints on the industry in the future, but that we would keep it on budget. I applaud them for that. The President knew this was perhaps the most controversial aspect of the bill's provisions. It was only after the fact—after the Senate bolted—and after the bill was sent back to the conference committee that he sent Richard Darman up to the Rayburn Building conference room to say that well, maybe he wouldn't veto it afterall. It was too late. The die was cast.

What I am wondering today is: when the first $50 billion is spent, and should REFCORP find that indeed they need more money, and they come to Congress for more borrowing authority—and I can only assume additional authority to borrow more money requires congressional consent—how many Members will be able to say no? Will they be able to say no after spending the first $50 billion? Is that any way to protect our investment, they will ask themselves? Where might it end?

If this bailout doesn't work in the way we envisioned, the Democratic House will bear the brunt of the blame. Why, because we are in a majority. Forget that the Senate, led by Republicans, placed on roadblock in our path that we were unable to overturn. Forget that without our plurality, the Republicans, including the President, couldn't have obtained a bailout bill in the first place—a bill they wanted very much and upon which President placed the highest first priority of this administration. Forget that Democrats also had a responsibility to defend depositors—constituents—against the loss of their savings by saving the thrift industry from total failure.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there are three things of which I am sure, and three things I want to make clear.

First, the House version was honest; it hid nothing from the public.

Second, the House version would have saved $5 billion up front had it been enacted as an on-budget bill.

Third, I cannot in good conscience now vote for a bill that is full of additional costs; that is off budget; and apt to cost far more than we know at this time, and particularly in the hands of a congressionally chartered "private" corporation which is not subject to as much control as it might have had attached to it had the House bill prevailed.

I can see it coming. I can see the ability and willingness of the Democratic majority in the House to work with the President on this, and to try to do something that did not raise enormous amounts of taxes with which to pay for it, turned against us during election year and we will be charged with calling a bill that, on its face is not a tax, a tax anyway, and it will be called a product of the Democratic majority because it will appear nowhere on the President's record.

As it stands now, the conference agreement, with its partial off-budget financing plan will produce additional costs, due to higher interest rates paid by the off-budget agency, and higher borrowing costs due to the off-budget corporation's inability to be flexible in managing its debt instruments.

I voted last Congress for what turned out to be a pig in a poke called the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. We Members who do not serve on the authorizing committees with jurisdiction over certain subject matter, do not know or fully understand every nuance of legislation placed before the House for a final vote. That was true of the catastrophic bill; I am very much afraid it might be true of this bill.

I will vote no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, again I must rise in opposition to this conference report. The improvements made last night in the conference committee are in fact not improvements at all, but actually increase the total cost of this legislation. I find it difficult to shift the burden of this crisis on our children and grandchildren just to achieve what is politically expedient today.

Of the $50 billion needed to close insolvent thrifts, this plan would raise $30 billion by issuing bonds—off budget—through a new private corporation. Borrowing money to close insolvent thrifts is a bad idea, but borrowing money off budget is the worst idea. This is due to the fact that the interest rates associated with these private corporation bonds would be higher than rates if the plan was left entirely on budget, because these bonds would not be guaranteed by the "full faith and credit of the U.S. Government." You can guess who would have to pay for these higher interest rates—the U.S. taxpayer.

I still believe the best method of solving this crisis is to put the total cost on budget and under Gramm-Rudman. This would force Congress and the President to deal with this problem right now, and save our taxpayers in excess of $150 billion over the next 30 years.

Mr. Speaker, on another point, it is my understanding that conference report redefines and significantly augments the powers of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation when the [FDIC] acts as the receiver for a failed financial institution. For example, section 212(a), which addresses the valuation of claims against a financial institution in default, establishes the power of the FDIC to differentiate among uninsured creditors of failed financial institutions. Notwithstanding the [FDIC] failure to effect ratable distributions in certain recent cases (which is along the lines empowered by section 212(a)), the National Bank Act and a long list of court decisions, including First Empire Bank versus FDIC, require the [FDIC] to treat all uninsured creditors in a like manner. Section 212(a) reverses current law, and frankly this concerns me. However, should this legislation become law, I want to point out that there is no stated or implied intent that any new powers to differentiate among uninsured creditors be applied to receiverships that have been established prior to enactment. It seems to me that this Nation once fought to eliminate "ex post facto" actions. Surely we would not revive them today!

Mr. Speaker, I cannot ask my constituents to pay $1,000 each to resolve this financial dilemma when a less expensive alternative exists. I urge my colleagues to reject the conference report.

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise in support of the conference agreement on H.R. 1278, the savings and loan reform legislation, though somewhat reluctantly. The timely enactment of this legislation is critical in terms of savings to the U.S. taxpayer. For each day that we delay, it is costing another $10 to $20 million. The total package assembled by the House Banking Committee over many months is a viable, long-term solution ensuring that a financial crisis of this nature never again occurs.

However, I want to make it clear that I do not agree with the financing provisions included in this conference agreement. Last night, in the conference negotiations, I voted against the plan to put $30 billion of the total $50 billion off budget as is called for in 1990 and 1991. I believe the entire $50 billion should be put on budget. This would result in even more savings to the U.S. taxpayers and is the honest way to represent the costs of this reform plan.

But I must remind my colleagues that this is a large, complex bill and, taken as a whole, is a sound and responsible plan that will clean up the savings and loan industry. It includes tough new capital standards and enforcement provisions to shut down and penalize those who have abused the system. I'm afraid that our only alternative on the financing issue is impasse with our colleagues in the other body. It appears that the agreement reached last night is the best option we can achieve. We must move forward and adopt the conference report.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I voted against the S&L bailout because of the financing plan which I believed posed devastating, and unnecessary, risks to our economy. The threat to the economy of higher interest rates because of the precedent of punching a hole in the center of the Gramm-Rudman Act was not acceptable to me.

After the Senate rejected the conference report on a point of order, the conferees met again and agreed to another plan which might be called a combination of the House and Senate plan. Like all compromises, it is awkward, and it fully satisfies nobody.

For those who believe that Treasury issues are cheaper, the 40 percent of the bond issue $20 billion, to be issued by Treasury, looks good. I personally don't like it because it shifts $20 billion in outlays back into fiscal 1989 after the threat of sequester has safely passed. Date shifts, in any guise, are gimmicks to be avoided if possible.

For those, like me, who believe the main risk is breaching Gramm-Rudman, this proposal, while far from perfect, is one that is acceptable in these emergency circumstances. The financing system uses an old, well-used loophole, that of date shifting. But it creates no new, unprecedented loophole.

Actually, all of the financing proposals, including the administration's, are subject to a Budget Act point of order. None of them was perfect. None was even close to perfect. But, the country has run out of time. Since the current imperfect compromise is the best likely to be achieved, I shall support it.

As for the bill itself, it is subject to many infinities. I wish it had been stronger. The criticisms raised by many Members are accurate. One point that bothers me greatly is that no restrictions were placed on the multiple $100,000 deposit guarantee of the U.S. Government.

The basic $100,000 deposit insurance may be all right, even though it is much higher than necessary to protect the deposits of moms and pops or small business. However, insuring an infinite number of $100,000 deposits of different institutions is a sheer waste of money, and a threat to the security of the financial system. The U.S. Government has no reason to insure more than one account of huge depositors. They can afford to take a little risk.

Another nagging question about the bill is whether it will do the whole job. Nobody knows that for sure, but there is a growing suspicion that more bonding authority will be needed to back up the deposit guarantees. Much will depend on the economy.

Finally, I don't like the multibillion-dollar housing program that has been attached to the bill. In the heat of the discussions, on the S&L crisis, the housing section got less attention and less debate than it needed. It should have been considered separately, but instead became a superpriviliged hitchhiker on a bill that was bound to pass eventually.

With all its warts, and even with its awkward financing mechanism, the bill is a necessity. S&L losses are a running sore on our economy. We need something to staunch the wound. This bill is all we have for first aid. We must pass it even it may not cure the injury totally. I urge a vote in favor of the conference report.

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I must express my strong opposition to the conference report.

My reason is simple: This bailout should be on budget. That's the honest thing to do. That's the right thing to do. Our taxpayers deserve better than this bill.

The Ways and Means Committee went on budget for one good reason: It was the best deal for the taxpayers of America. It was less expensive by some $5 billion.

Today working men and working women are being asked to pay additional billions of dollars, for one purpose—to finance an accounting gimmick that shows the very lack of political will that created the budget problem in the first place.

Here we are, being asked to support the King Kong of bailouts, and I am willing to do it. But I am not willing to do it in a way that wastes money in a clouded fog of smoke and mirrors.

Off budget is wrong. Half off budget is wrong. Two-thirds off budget is wrong. Three-fifths off budget is wrong. Are we really willing to waste $3 billion of the taxpayers' money, because it's better than wasting $5 billion of the taxpayers' money?

It's funny to see how creative minds find every way to avoid budget discipline. They move pay dates. They put the post office off budget. They use black magic economic forecasts. They dance, they twist, and they turn to avoid the hard choices this country must make. Their lips say Gramm-Rudman, but their heart says copout. And they are asking us today to copout once again.

If Gramm-Rudman is real, we need discipline, honesty, and courage. If Gramm-Rudman is real, we need responsible actions, by the President and Congress, to reduce the deficit. If Gramm-Rudman is real, we ask one simple question: How do we get the job done, at the lowest possible cost?

On budget, off budget, whatever, we ask that one question: How do we get the job done, at the lowest possible cost? The Ways and Means Committee concluded, after great deliberation, that the taxpayers save billions of dollars by going on budget. The committee was right. The full House was right. The first conference agreement was right. And the proposal before us is wrong.

I would argue that establishing off budget REFCORP bonds is even a worse precedent than waiving Gramm-Rudman. Next we will be voting on off-budget bonds for financing our Space Program and the war against drugs.

The fact is, the financial markets will view the off-budget method of financing for what it is—"recess politics" at its best. The President knows the Congress is lacking the political will to stay in session over this "emergency" legislation that has taken 6 months to pass. I don't think the President would veto an on-budget bill that saves the taxpayer billions, accomplishes what the financial markets are looking for, and allows the bailout to begin immediately. It would be the greatest mistake of his political career.

Our former colleague, Senator PROXMIRE, frequently gave out what he called the Golden Fleece Award. In honor of the Senator, I think it is appropriate we award this conference report the alltime 24-carat Fleece Award.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree that Government has a responsibility to try to get the best bargain for the taxpayers.

In the case of the bailout of the savings & loan industry—the worst financial scandal in the history of this country—we in Congress have a choice to make.

Do we want to save $10 to $20 billion by being honest and put the bailout on budget?

Or do we want to engage in phony accounting and stick the taxpayers with another $10 to $20 billion bill?

To me the answer is easy.

In these hot, muggy days of August, I am looking forward to going home to Maine to enjoy the natural air-conditioning of the Atlantic Ocean.

But, I am prepared to stay here until doomsday before I force on the taxpayers of this country an unnecessary additional cost of $10 to $20 billion.

I hope this House shows resolve and does not kowtow to the administration.

If the administration does not care about getting the best bargain for the taxpayers, this House should.

Let's be straightforward.

Let's get the best bargain for the taxpayers.

Let's borrow the money the cheapest way possible—on budget.

I urge a "no" vote on the conference report.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I rise reluctantly to support this conference report.

I am supporting this bill because it fulfills our Federal commitment to protect depositors at our Nation's financial institutions, maintains the tough capital standards developed by the House, guarantees tough future regulation of the thrift industry, and ensures the investigation and prosecution of S&L operators who have engaged in fraudulent behavior.

My reluctance primarily comes from the financial chicanery the House and Senate budget conferees agreed to under White House pressure last night. The new financing plan is less honest, less straightforward, and will cost taxpayers more money than the original House onbudget plan. But President Bush will not sign the bill, and the Senate cannot pass it, without this deceptive financing plan.

The administration has made it clear that it is willing to obstruct and to delay, in order to get its way, so that it may evade budget discipline. This obstruction is costing taxpayers some $20 million per day. It simply cannot go on. And so it falls to us in the House to pass this bill, despite its flaws, for the alternative is far worse.

I cannot fathom why the administration would do this to the taxpayers of this country. The National Taxpayers Union calls the President's financing plan a "worthless accounting gimmick," and I agree. Today, we are saving taxpayers money by acting without further delay, but we could have saved billions more in interest costs had we left the S&L plan on budget. The President and the Gramm gang in the Senate bear full responsibility for this bill's budget evasions and its unnecessary and excessive expense.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the President's offbudget financing plan whereby about 60 percent of the S&L bailout is deferred to future generations. This has been the financial plan of the Nation for most of the past 20 years. I don't like it and I have offered the Truth in Budgeting Act to correct this "go now, pay later" method of financing the Government. The way to change this policy is to enact my bill, not to address the issue piecemeal as many recommend tonight. Accordingly, I support the conference report.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, with great reluctance, I vote today for this—the second report of the conference on H.R. 1278 because it addresses two overriding concerns.

My first reason to support this conference report is based on a very fundamental issue—the Federal Government, by guaranteeing the savings deposited in federally insured savings institutions, has placed the full faith and credit of the United States behind the protection of the individual saver.

We must remember that for every fat cat and cowboy who got us into this mess, there are thousands of families who have put their trust and their savings in protected savings institutions.

My foremost concern is for those ordinary people across this country who have deposited more than $1 trillion in savings and loans based on the assurance of safety.

This is the money that these people have saved for their futures. This is the money that builds new houses for families and is invested in our communities.

These individuals were not responsible for the current crisis, and I firmly believe that the Government must honor its commitment to insure them—just as the Government must honor its commitments to purchasers of savings bonds or commercial bank depositors.

My second reason for supporting this conference report is that we cannot afford further delays.

Without this new law, we remain in limbo at a cost of $20 to $30 million a day. Why? Because we cannot secure the savings and loan insurance system without a workable refinancing plan.

I am reminded, as we talk about the $20-million-a-day cost of delay that in 1987, a number of us strongly supported legislation to provide $18 billion to address what at that time was a relatively manageable situation.

Instead of lancing the boil, it was allowed to fester. Instead of $18 billion, we are talking $300 billion over 10 years. That's a heck of a lot of money for something that started out as a much smaller problem.

At the time, I took a lot of flack for that proposal, but I will tell you today that if the House leadership and the savings and loan industry had listened to us at that time, we would not be here today talking about $20 million a day, Mr. Speaker.

But we are here. And, like it or not, this thing is still growing and we are only now scheduling the treatments.

Mr. Speaker, let us get on with this, understanding that the politics of delay and denial got us where we are today.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, the second conference report on H.R. 1278 is a very responsible bill with a very irresponsible financing mechanism.

Billions of dollars in new costs are not thrust upon the taxpayer, not by the unscrupulous savings and loan operators but by the Department of the Treasury and President Bush.

The $1,000 that this bill has been reputed to cost every American has now been increased by the Bush factor—the cost of a financing scheme so bizarre it makes voodoo economics look like elementary arithmetic.

This new plan to finance the bailout, part-on-part-off the budget, is worse than either plan alone. Moreover, it trivializes the legislative process and makes it appear as if we could not make up our minds.

The architects of this folly have handed us an unresolvable dilemma. This is a "catch-22" personified. The responsible act is to pass the bill. However, that would require doing the irresponsible by including this "now-it-is, now-it-isn't" budget scheme. To do the responsible by passing the bill would be irresponsible because the bill mandates including the funding wizardry.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I will not be present for the final vote. I have been forced to return to my district in California to keep commitments made long ago. It appears to me that in a situation like this, it may not be possible to act responsibly.

I regret that I cannot join my colleagues in acting "responsible" by casting a vote on the conference report.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to explain to my colleagues why I will note "no" on the S&L conference report. I would support this report if it were possible to go home and explain to my constituents that, while they will have to pay a heavy price to bail out FSLIC, the problem will be solved by this legislation. Unfortunately, this is not the case. I think the odds are better than 50–50 that we will be back at this again before the end of the President's first term. Simply put, there is insufficient "reform" in this bill to prevent a recurrence of the problems which have brought us to the point we're at today. Let me briefly cite three examples:

First, the open-ended $100,000 insurance limit will continue to draw large investors into the highest yielding and, therefore, riskiest associations. Insurance should be limited to $100,000 per depositor.

Second, the emphasis on housing investment by S&L's, while socially and politically appealing, greatly increases the risk to the Government as the ultimate insuror if housing prices soften. In other words, rather than encouraging diversified investments, which spread the risks, we have actually increased the risks to the associations and thereby to the taxpayers.

Third, and, finally, the Rube Goldberg plan to administer this program—a mishmash of governmental and nongovernmental activity—will diffuse responsibility and thwart effective congressional oversight.

As for the financing, my support for the earlier House plan is well known. As I listened to the debate yesterday in both the House and Senate, it seemed to focus on which plan would best reassure world credit markets—and on that point reasonable people can and do differ. But the Mickey Mouse scheme before us today pales in comparison with either of the earlier two plans. It is embarrassing to recall the outrage of just a few days ago around here about the Pentagon shifting less than $3 billion of fiscal year 1990 military pay into the current year, and then realize that this new financing compromise will do the same thing to the tune of $20 billion. What a great precedent for other programs in the future.

I conclude by saying that I hope I'm wrong—but I don't think I am, and I simply am not going to ask my constituents to reach deep into their pockets to pay for a flawed bailout.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report on H.R. 1278, the Financial Institutions, Reform, Recovery and Enhancement Act of 1989. The only thing this bill accomplishes is to pay off our obligations to the depositors. However, this legislaton does not address the larger problem of preventing this crisis from happening in the future.

What we have decided to do here tonight is to place restrictions on these financial institutions and ask them to put up a little more of their own money. All this means is that if an institution engages in risky business, they will lose a little more of their own money, but the American taxpayer is still on the hook for a vast amount of money should the institution fail. Further, if an institution is failing, there is nothing in this legislation to prevent it from risking even more taxpayer's dollars to attempt to avoid being closed down by the Government.

Our financial industry is too important to leave in the hands of the Federal Government. Only market forces can instill the fiscal discipline necessary for a healthy industry.

There are two ways to achieve this goal. One is to reduce the amount of insurance for each depositor. Instead of $100,000 per account, only insure $40,000 per person. The average depositor has less than $8,500 in deposits. This would protect the vast majority of depositors and large depositors would have an incentive to monitor the performance of the institution the same way that stockholders monitor publicly traded corporations.

Another way to introduce market forces is to establish risk-based premiums. Those financial institutions using conservative management principles would have low premiums since their probability of default is low. Institutions making riskier investments would pay a higher premium to reflect the exposure of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill does not address the industry reforms which are desperately needed and I fear Congress will return to the place we are today—asking the American taxpayer for more money to pay off depositors—because we have failed to bring market discipline to the financial industry.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the next time Congress goes further than just pay the debts, but also corrects the problem.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2712. An act to facilitate the adjustment or change of status of Chinese nationals in the United States by waiving the 2-year foreign residence requirement for "J" nonimmigrants.

WAIVING CERTAIN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO H.R 1278, FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS REFORM, RECOVERY AND ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1989

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 390) waiving certain enrollment requirements with respect to the bill, H.R. 1278.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I seek to clarify the intent with respect to the prospective application of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act. I understand this bill redefines and augments the powers of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation [FDIC] when the FDIC serves as a receiver for a failed financial institution. The powers set for in this legislation are, in many respects, new, and I understand that there is no stated or implied intent that such powers be applied to receiverships that have been established prior to the enactment of this bill. For example, new subsection 11(i) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, authorizing the FDIC to differentiate in making payments to creditors of failed financial institutions, represents a significant departure from current law and is not to be applied to existing receiverships. Under existing law, notwithstanding the FDIC's actions in certain recent cases, all uninsured creditors of failed banks are required to be treated in an identical manner, and the FDIC has absolutely no discretion to favor a single creditor or any single class of creditors over another. I further understand that this subsection is not intended to be applied to litigation that is currently pending.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 390

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. HAND ENROLLMENT AUTHORIZATION.

(a) WAIVER OF CERTAIN LAWS WITH RESPECT TO PRINTING OF ENROLLED BILL.—The provisions of sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code, are waived with respect to the printing (on parchment or otherwise) of the enrollment of the bill H.R. 1278 of the One Hundred First Congress.

(b) CERTIFICATION BY COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION.—The enrollment of the bill shall be in such form as the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives certifies to be a true enrollment.

SEC. 2. SUBSEQUENT PREPARATION AND CERTIFICATION OF PRINTED ENROLLMENT.

(a) PREPARATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Upon the enactment of the bill following its presentment to the President in the form of a hand enrollment pursuant to the authority of section 1 of this resolution, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall prepare a printed enrollment of the bill as in the case of a bill to which sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code, apply.

(2) LIMITED STYLISTIC CORRECTIONS.—The printed enrollment prepared pursuant to paragraph (1) may, in order to conform to customary style of printed laws, include corrections in spelling, punctuation, indentation, type face, and type size and other necessary stylistic corrections to the hand enrollment. The printed enrollment shall include notations (in the margins or as otherwise appropriate) of all such corrections.

(b) TRANSMITTAL TO PRESIDENT.—The printed enrollment prepared pursuant to subsection (a) shall be signed by the presiding officer of each House of Congress as a correct printing of the hand enrollment and shall be transmitted to the President.

(c) CERTIFICATION BY PRESIDENT; LEGAL EFFECT.—Upon certification by the President that the printed enrollment transmitted pursuant to subsection (b) is a correct printing of the hand enrollment, such printed enrollment shall be considered for all purposes as the original enrollment of the bill and as valid evidence of its enactment.

(d) ARCHIVES.—The printed enrollment certified by the President under subsection (c) shall be transmitted to the Archivist of the United States, who shall preserve it with the hand enrollment. In preparing the bill for publication in slip form and in the United States Statutes at Large pursuant to section 112 of title 1, United States Code, the Archivist of the United States shall use the printed enrollment certified by the President under subsection (c) in lieu of the hand enrollment.

(e) HAND ENROLLMENT DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term "hand enrollment" means the enrollment, as authorized by section 1, of a bill for presentment to the President in a form other than the printed form required by sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the House amendment to the Senate amendment, as follows:

House amendment to Senate amendment: Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Chinese Immigration Relief Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. STATUS OF CERTAIN NATIONALS OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

(a) WAIVER OF FOREIGN RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT FOR "J" NONIMMIGRANTS.—The 2-year home country residency and physical presence period requirement under section 212(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(e)) shall not apply in the case of any national of the People's Republic of China who is present in the United States on the date of the enactment of this Act (or who would have been present in the United States but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States) and who would otherwise be subject to that 2-year home residence requirement because of having had the status of a nonimmigrant described in section 101(a)(15)(J) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(J)).

(b) PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUOUS RESIDENCE FOR CERTAIN PRC NATIONALS.—For purposes of any adjustment of status under section 245 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1255) or any change of status under section 248 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1258) in the case of an alien who is a national of the People's Republic of China and who, as of June 5, 1989, was present in the United States in the lawful status of a nonimmigrant (or who would have been present in the United States in the status but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States), such an alien shall be considered as having continued to maintain lawful status as such a nonimmi-grant (and to have maintained continuously a lawful status) for the period described in subsection (e).

(c) EMPLOYMENT AUTHORIZATION.—Any national of the People's Republic of China described in subsection (b) who, as of June 5, 1989, was present in the United States in the lawful status of a nonimmigrant described in subparagraph (F), (J), or (M) of section 101(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (or who would have been present in the United States in the status but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States) shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and shall be provided with an "employment authorized" endorsement or other appropriate work permit during the period described in subsection (e).

(d) DURATION OF STATUS.—The period of time referred to in subsections (b), (c), and (e) is the period during which the Attorney General has in effect a deferral of enforced departure for nationals of the People's Republic of China.

(e) NOTIFICATION.—In the case of any national of the People's Republic of China who is eligible for deferral of enforced departure pursuant to a directive of the Attorney General during the period described in subsection (c) and whose authorized period of stay as a nonimmigrant has expired, the Attorney General shall, instead of initiating deportation proceedings against the alien (including the service of an order to show cause) during the period described in subsection (c), issue to the alien a notice of expiration of nonimmigrant status. Such notice shall be nonadversarial in nature and shall contain an explanation of the options available to such nationals under the directive of the Attorney General and under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House amendment to the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. BROOKS], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, if he would explain the House amendment to the Senate amendment that he has proposed right now.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, earlier this week, the House unanimously adopted legislation to provide protection to Chinese students in the United States. That bill, H.R. 2712, would waive the 2-year foreign residency requirement that applies to Chinese exchange visitors who are now in the United States. Absent this waiver, these Chinese students—some 32,000 people—would have to return to China before they could apply for a visa to come here.

The Senate amendment to H.R. 2712 would limit the availability of this waiver to only those students whose exchange visitor visas expire before June 5 of next year. I believe the House bill, which waives the 2-year foreign residency requirement regardless of when it becomes applicable, provides greater assurances to the Chinese students and should be maintained.

The Senate has also added a nongermane provision dealing with U.S. asylum policy concerning forced abortions. It seems to me that the immediate issue of protecting Chinese students here in the United States is utterly unrelated to this Senate provision and can only cause us to become engaged in an unnecessary debate.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I would just point out, as the chairman has pointed out, that we had offered to the Senate an agreeable form of this bill which could have been passed and sent to the President. Unfortunately, the Senate insisted on adding nongermane language.

We need to send this back to them, and if they want this bill they need to accept what we offer.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to support this.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS]?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOMER THORNBERRY JUDICIAL BUILDING

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2334) to redesignate the Post Office located at 300 East Ninth Street in Austin, TX, as the "Homer Thornberry Judicial Building," and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under my reservation I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE], the author of the bill.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, today, I am happy to support legislation which will rename the old downtown Post Office in Austin, TX, as the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building.

Homer Thornberry is deserving of this honor because of his 40 years of service to the Federal Government both as a Congressman from the 10th District of Texas and as a judge of the United States 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Homer Thornberry was born in Austin, Travis County, TX, on January 9, 1909. He attended the public schools in Austin and went on to receive both a bachelors degree and a law degree from the University of Texas. He was a member of the State House of Representatives from 1936 until 1941, served in the U.S. Navy in World War II from 1942 until 1946 and was a member of the Austin City Council from 1946 until 1949.

He was elected as a Democrat to the 81st Congress and served from January 3, 1949 until his resignation on December 20, 1963, serving until he was sworn in as U.S. circuit judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals of the Fifth Judicial Circuit on July 3, 1965 in which capacity he is still serving.

Homer Thornberry succeeded Lyndon Johnson as the Congressman serving the 10th District of Texas. He served in Congress for 15 years, from 1949 to 1963, and during that time won the respect, admiration and love of the people of central Texas.

Before I came to the 88th Congress, I was privileged to work closely with the then Congressman Homer Thornberry. We were good friends and some of us felt like we were part of his "kitchen cabinet." I knew him to be a hard-working, high-type gentleman with great ability and dedication.

He began as a member of the Rules Committee and rose to a senior appointed position in that committee which showed that he was recognized as a legislative and parliamentary leader indeed, and also a key part of the official leadership in those days.

I believe he was as well liked and respected as any man who ever served in this body. Since coming here as his successor, I have learned, all the more, how much his service meant to the district and what an invaluable contribution he has made to our times.

Serving 15 years in the Congress is a great accomplishment. He worked alongside Senator Lyndon B. Johnson, Sam Rayburn, John McCormack, Carl Albert, Hale Boggs, Charlie Halleck, Joe Martin, and Richard Bolling.

He obtained the reputation of a man of effectiveness and consideration. I assume he was a part of the old "Board of Education Group" so decorously administered by Speaker Rayburn and his colleagues.

He served the people of the 10th District of Texas faithfully and well throughout his term in Congress. He has been just as successful in carrying out his duties as a judge as he was as a U.S. Representative.

In my view, the qualities of a good judge are fairness, good judgment, common sense, truthfulness, integrity and above all, the ability to reconcile different points of view. Homer Thornberry more than fulfills these qualities.

The old downtown Post Office in Austin is no longer being used as a Post Office and is being renovated to serve as an office building for Federal judges, and the building is in need of an appropriate title. I can think of a no more deserving person than Homer Thornberry to receive this recognition.

For his 15 years of unique and unusual service representing the 10th District of Texas in Congress and his 25 years of continuing service to the people as a judge of the Court of Appeals, I consider it a personal privilege to recommend that the old Post Office in Austin be designated as the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN] of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support H.R. 2334, which would redesignate the Post Office located at 300 East Ninth Street in Austin, TX, as the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building.

Homer Thornberry is from Austin, TX and has made many outstanding contributions to his State and the Nation. He served in Congress for 15 years, from 1949 to 1963. In this capacity, he became a senior member of the Rules Committee and was well known for his legislative and parliamentary skills.

He resigned from Congress in 1963 to accept a position as a U.S. district judge for the western district of Texas.

In 1965, he became a U.S. circuit judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals of the Fifth Judicial Circuit. He assumed senior status in 1979. Today, he continues to serve in that capacity.

Homer Thornberry has been a judge who brings to his cases important character traits: fairness, integrity and wisdom.

Consequently, it is very appropriate that we name the building after this distinguished legislator and judge, Homer Thornberry.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2334 would redesignate the old Post Office in downtown Austin, TX, as the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building. This building is currently being renovated to house judiciary activities.

Homer Thornberry has a long history of public service, beginning with his election to the State house of representatives in 1936. Following service in the Navy during World War II, he was elected to the Austin City Council.

In 1948, Homer Thornberry was elected to this House where he served as the Representative of the 10th District of Texas for 15 years. He was a senior member of the Rules Committee who was known for his legislative and parliamentary skills.

Judge Thornberry retired from Congress in 1963 when he was appointed as a judge of the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas. Less than 2 years later, he began service as a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, where he continues to serve today.

H.R. 2334 was introduced by our colleague JAKE PICKLE, who is Homer Thornberry's successor and good friend. The bill is sponsored by the entire Texas delegation, which is another indication of the high esteem in which Homer Thornberry is held. In light of his many years of distinguished service, it seems appropriate that the Post Office be designated as the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2334 would honor a distinguished public servant, Homer Thornberry, by designating a Post Office in downtown Austin, TX, as the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building. Following renovation, this building will be primarily devoted to judicial uses.

Homer Thornberry began his career in public service over 50 years ago. He has held a number of local and State offices, and in 1948 was elected to represent the 10th District of Texas in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Following 15 years of service, during which time he rose to a senior position on the Rules Committee, Homer Thornberry accepted a Federal judgeship back in his home State of Texas. He later was appointed to the U.S. Court of Appeals, where he continues to serve today.

The entire Texas delegation has chosen to cosponsor H.R. 2334, which was introduced by Judge Thornberry's successor—JAKE PICKLE. Naming this building the Homer Thornberry Judicial Building is a fitting honor to a man who has dedicated his life to public service.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 2334

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REDESIGNATION OF POST OFFICE.

The Post Office located at 300 East Ninth Street, in Austin, Texas, is redesignated as the "Homer Thornberry Judicial Building".

SEC. 2. REFERENCES.

Any reference in a law, rule, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States to the Post Office referred to in section 1 is deemed to be a reference to the "Homer Thornberry Judicial Building".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2334, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAMES OF MEMBERS AS COSPONSORS OF H.R. 2403

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that two of our colleagues, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLAUGHTER] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] be removed as cosponsors of H.R. 2403. This was due to a computer error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3024. An act to increase the statutory limit on the public debt, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 231. Joint resolution designating September 1989 as "National Library Card Sign-Up Month";

H.J. Res. 253. Joint resolution designating September 8, 1989, as "National Pledge of Allegiance Day"; and

REPRESENTATIVE FRANK APOLOGIZES TO THE SENATE

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve the right to object because, being so used to the articulate and erudite expressions of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would on my reservation like to inquire as to why he seeks this extraordinary privilege of the House at this time.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me on his reservation.

Mr. ECKART. For the purposes of his usual explanation on the matter, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, having consulted with the very distinguished and objective parliamentarians and with the Speaker, on reflection it did seem to me that my comparison of the U.S. Senate to Jell-O was not totally in keeping with the traditions of this institution and I thought it would be appropriate for me to indicate that fact to the House.

Mr. ECKART. Continuing my reservation of objection on this matter, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the gentleman should offer his apology to General Foods.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, as I said in foolish answer to the gentleman from Ohio, while I was not enthralled with the performance of our constitutional equal, the U.S. Senate, my comparison to them as Jell-O did not seem to me, on sober second thought, to be entirely appropriate, and I therefore apologize.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take this occasion to state that the Chair appreciates the good humor of debate, but the Chair also believes that all Members should observe the rules of comity with respect to the other body. I am glad the gentleman from Massachusetts has made his statement.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES TO HAVE UNTIL SEPTEMBER 1, 1989 TO FILE REPORTS ON H.R. 1465, OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION ACT OF 1989, AND H.R. 2459, COAST GUARD AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee have until the close of business, September 1, 1989, to file reports on H.R. 1465, the Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act of 1989, and H.R. 2459, the Coast Guard Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL MARITIME COMMISSION AUTHORIZATION FISCAL YEAR 1990

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 840) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Federal Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Senate Amendments: Page 3, after line 2, insert:

SEC. 4. (a) Notwithstanding sections 12106 through 12108 of title 46, United States Code, and section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 App. U.S.C. 883), the Secretary of Transportation may issue a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwide trade or fisheries, or both, for the following vessels:

(1) African Queen, United States official number 947514 and Florida registration number FL 9357CE;

(2) American Empire, United States official number 553645;

(3) HMS Discovery, Washington State registration number WAZ 9816 F; and

(4) Papa Joe, Florida registration number FL 3900CW.

(b) Notwithstanding sections 508 and 510(g) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1158 and 1160(g)), section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 App. U.S.C. 883), and United States Department of Transportation Contract Numbered MA-3915 and amendments thereto, the Secretary of Transportation is authorized to allow, and the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may issue a certificate of documentation for, the vessel M/V Northern Victor (ex-Ocean Cyclone, ex-Coastal Spartan), United States official number 248959, to acquire, purchase, process, and transport fish and fish products in the fisheries of the United States: Provided, That if the vessel is scrapped, it shall not be scrapped other than in the domestic market without the prior approval of the Secretary of Transportation.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding section 27 of Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 U.S.C. App. 883) and sections 12106 and 12107 of title 46, United States Code, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may issue a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwide trade of the United States for the vessel M/V South Bass (Registration number 949048).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAUZIN] if he would be good enough to explain for the purpose of the record exactly what the result of the conference was.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this bill is the same as passed by the House on April 25, with the addition of the waivers of the coastwide trade laws for six vessels, including the African Queen of movie fame. I believe that these are all noncontroversial, and most have companion bills that have been sponsored by Members of the House.

Some of these vessels are under purchase contracts, and if they are not passed before the House adjourns for the district work period then the owners will suffer serious financial hardship by losing a large part of this tourist season.

So these are the only amendments the Senate adopted. Otherwise the bill is identical to the version of the bill as passed by the House on April 25.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana for his explanation and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS

Washington, DC, August 3, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
The Speaker, the House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Enclosed are corrected copies of a Committee Resolution that was originally forwarded to you as part of a packet of resolutions by the Public Works and Transportation Committee on June 27, 1989. Due to a GSA clerical error, the funding authorization in the original resolution only reflected funding needed for Phase I of the project. Please note the correct funding authorization which is what was approved by the Committee and make the appropriate substitution.

Every best wish.

Sincerely,

GLENN M. ANDERSON,
Chairman.

REMARKS OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, on August 1, 1989, Vice President J. DANFORTH QUAYLE addressed the 107th Annual Supreme Council Meeting of the Knights of Columbus, in Baltimore, MD. The Vice President spoke eloquently about family values and about the important role the Knights of Columbus have played and continue to play in the United States. I believe our colleagues will benefit from the chance of reading what the Vice President said.

At this point, I wish to include in the RECORD the text of a speech given by the Vice President of the United States to the 107th Annual Supreme Council Meeting of the Knights of Columbus:

TEXT OF REMARKS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

It is impossible to appear before you today and not say a few words about what weighs so heavily upon all of us. The President and his senior advisors are monitoring the situation affecting the hostages as closely as is possible. Needless to say, we are trying to confirm just what happened to Colonel Higgins and to determine the exact situation in which the other hostages find themselves.

You will appreciate that I cannot go into great detail about this. What I can say, though, is that we oppose the taking of hostages, that we call upon all those who have taken hostages to release them, and that we will continue to hold responsible any party that takes an American citizen hostage. We are also calling upon all those with an ability to affect the fate of these innocent people to do so to ensure that no harm comes to them.

It's a great honor to be invited to address the Knights of Columbus.

Two hundred years ago, when John Carroll became the first Bishop of the Catholic Church in the United States, his flock was small, scattered, and often scorned. But his extraordinary leadership and impeccable character laid an enduring foundation for the generations to come.

We can learn much from the example of leaders, whether in church or in state, like John Carroll. We can learn to look beyond ourselves, to see goals more important than our personal ambitions, and to envision a future that will stretch beyond our individual advancement. Bishop Carroll lived at a time when this country's leaders—like his cousin, Charles Carroll of Carrolton, the only Catholic signer of the Declaration of Independence—could pledge to a noble cause their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

Let me share with you some thoughts about decency in politics and about my job and my family. And I also want to talk about some of the problems that confront this great nation of ours.

Many times, during an in-depth interview, journalists will ask what impact my job is having on the family.

My response is always the same. Marilyn and I are veterans when it comes to politics. We've gone through two Congressional campaigns, two Senate campaigns and one Vice Presidential campaign. We've been in the public eye for 13 years—a majority of our adult lives.

My children have virtually grown up in Washington. They have had as a father a public official virtually since day one of their lives.

Marilyn and I have certainly had some challenging and exciting times during our 17 years of marriage, and now is no exception. We have the exhilaration of public service and the challenge of seeking to do the right thing for our nation.

The most difficult aspect of our new responsibility, from a family point of view, is the complete loss of privacy.

Our children are still young—ages 15, 12, and 10. But they have adapted to their new situation with great ease.

Children are strong yet impressionable. They are on a sharp learning curve in school and at home. Parents set the tone, and hopefully Marilyn and I have done the right things in raising our children . . . . Only time will tell.

But I don't think the pressures of public life necessarily hurt a family. As a matter of fact, the day-to-day pressures actually bring you closer. What really hurts a family—any family—with a Mom or Dad in public life is the widespread assumption that politics is a dirty game.

Now we all know it can be. But we should all know it doesn't have to be.

I have the tremendous privilege of working with a man, a leader, a friend, for whom politics has been a lifetime of public service. Service in the old sense of pursuing the public good rather than the private advantage.

George Bush is a strong President, but he knows the difference between being tough and being mean.

In today's world of video retakes and teleprompters, you can fake a lot of things. But you can't fake decency. And an authentic, deep-down decency has been George and Barbara's gift to their fellow Americans.

Sure, that's important to me as his, and your, Vice President. But it's even more important to me as a parent. Because I never want my children to be ashamed of their Father's occupation. My kids—and yours—should be equally proud if they can say: my Dad's a plumber, a painter, a poet or a politician.

We can't overlook the ugly reality of political scandals, and that goes for both parties. (Because, when it comes to throwing stones, both parties live in glass houses.) But we can recognize excellence when we see it. We can hold up real heroes to our youngsters. We can try to teach them by example about what really matters in public life.

I know personally most members of Congress, on both sides of the aisle. And most of them are just like you and me, family folks, trying to do their best, pilgrims on the same journey that, we hope, will end in the safest of destinations. And every once in awhile, one or another of them can teach us something about greatness.

I think of the late speaker of the House of Representatives, John McCormack of Massachusetts. Mr. McCormack was not a member of my political party. Indeed, he probably thought the creator had an off-day when he made Republicans.

But all of us in government—or in other professions, for that matter—can learn from his example as a family man. Every night, no matter how important a social event might be, no matter how late the Congress was in session, every night, John McCormack went home to have dinner with his wife.

And when, in old age, she was hospitalized at length, he went with her, living in the room next to hers. For as those of you from the Bay State will recall, John McCormack respected life—from its very beginning to its natural end.

Let's make that a bipartisan position too.

I should mention that Senator Robert Byrd of West Virginia, the President pro tem of the Senate, is famous for the same kind of loyalty to his family. Although Senator Byrd and I might not see eye-to-eye on many things, his devotion to Erma after their half-century of marriage is an example for all of us to follow.

Of course, when I come to the Knights of Columbus to talk about family life and loyalty and public service, I'm speaking to the choir. Any way you measure it—by tens of millions of dollars or by tens of millions of working hours—the Knights represent volunteerism at its best.

When I get back to the White House tonight, I can tell the President I have seen his "thousand points of light." They were glinting from the swords of the Knights of Columbus.

For all you have done, and continue doing, to make this country the more humane and more decent land we want it to be, you have my heartfelt thanks, and the President's too.

Decades ago, you helped to secure the addition of the words "under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag. Now we hope for your help in securing constitutional protection for the Flag against desecration.

For almost two decades, you have worked courageously to restore protection of the law for children before birth. Now, we count on you to help us follow through on the Supreme Court's recent Webster decision, as we press on to secure the right of those very little ones, the least of our brethren.

And on that point, I want to offer special congratulations to the Knights in the Philippines, who assisted President Aquino's inclusion of a human life amendment in your new constitution. Where you have led, may we soon follow.

On another front, too, the Knights of Columbus have my admiration and support. You stand foursquare against bigotry and discrimination.

Your founders knew what discrimination meant. They, and perhaps some of you, had been on the receiving end of it. But they offered a different vision of the future; diversity within national unity. Pride in the things that make us different, and pride in those that bind us together as one.

In the early years of the Knights, prejudice was crude and overt. The Klan, for example, was strong in my home state of Indiana. And the response of many decent Americans could be just as direct. When my Grandfather was confronted by the Klan with demands that he stop doing business with certain Jewish colleagues, he went into the next room, got his gun, and ran the Klan off the property.

Unfortunately, prejudice is still with us, though its tactics are different. And we must continue to stand against prejudice in all its forms.

We must also reassert the fundamental relationship between our civic life and our moral standards. We have here in Baltimore a symbol of that unity in one of the architectural treasures of the early republic: the Old Cathedral, the Basilica of the Assumption, just a few blocks from here.

The man who designed it, Benjamin Latrobe, was the architect of the U.S. Capitol. And in that day, no one thought it unusual that the genius who fashioned our seat of government would turn his hand to crafting a place of prayer. For Americans presumed a harmony between religion and government, between their monuments to freedom and their houses of worship.

Most of us, I think, still do. We believe that government is at its best when it translates into action the ethical commitments of the American people.

And that kind of action will be absolutely necessary if we have any hope of making a better future for our children.

Tom Wolfe, the writer who coined the term, "the me decade" to describe the 1970's, has called the present period in American life "the great re-learning." He means that our country is in the process of rediscovering some fundamental truths that were forgotten or set aside in the 1960's and 1970's.

Truths about the way we live, and the consequences of our behavior. Truths about what makes us happy over the long run, and what happens when we live for the short run.

One of those truths, I believe, is the primacy of the family. On issue after issue, government at all levels is trying to cope with the consequences of the breakdown in family life: in delinquency and drug abuse, in welfare dependency and homelessness, in abandonment of the elderly and abuse of our children.

The problems are staggering, but not unsolvable. And if we want to do more than relieve the symptoms, we are going to have to deal with their one underlying pathology. We are going to have to put the family at the very center of public policy and measure what government does in terms of what it does to the family.

That, I submit, is what one of the biggest battles of this Congress has been about. I'm referring to the child care issue. This is something President Bush and I both feel strongly about:

We want to help all low-income families, including those whose mothers stay at home to raise the kids.

And we won't tolerate discrimination against church-related day care. America's religious institutions are doing a crucial job in providing safe and loving care for millions of youngsters. We can't let their boys and girls be shut out.

If you feel the same way, you might want to let your representatives in the Congress hear from you.

That's one way we can protect the rights of the family, and together we're going to have to find many more, as part of our long-range effort to get American society back on track and ready for the future.

The promise of that future is my constant concern these days. Early in this Administration, President Bush asked me to chair the National Space Council, to give direction and energy to America's Space Program. For he believes, as I do, that our country has to get back into space, and in a big way.

The research, the science, the technology, the know-how of space exploration and development will be the building blocks of our future here on earth. They have the potential to revolutionize the way we live—the way we all can live—in an expansive, confident society, where economic growth and scientific advance make opportunity possible for those who need it most.

By the way, when I preside over the National Space Council, in my office there is a pedestal behind my chair. And upon it rests a bust of Christopher Columbus, the "Admiral of the Ocean Sea."

America's enterprise in space is the Columbian voyage of our era. A new world awaits us, a world whose blessings we can earn for our children's children, if we have the daring and determination to "sail on."

The 500th anniversary of Columbus' first voyage is less than 3 years away. It is my hope that, by then, the United States of America, that "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," will also be well on its way to being Columbia, pioneer of planets, joiner of heavens to the earth.

The upcoming Columbian anniversary has another significance, an international one. For it will be observed by our neighbors throughout this Hemisphere, especially those whose faith and language and culture bear the imprint of the cross and crown for which Columbus claimed the new world.

With them, we are heirs to a culture whose human values have fostered both faith and freedom.

Through Latin America in recent years, there has been remarkable progress toward stability and democracy. But there are exceptions, and we must be realistic about them. In confronting evil—and let me say, without equivocation, that I consider Marxism intrinsically, inherently evil—good intentions are not enough.

Good intentions do not avail against the Cuban-Nicaraguan backed terrorists who gun down public officials in the streets of El Salvador. Good intentions cannot secure fair elections in Nicaragua or release the victims of Sandinista oppression from its prisons.

In this context, we admire and are thankful for the efforts of Cardinal Obando y Bravo. Raised up from obscurity, like one of the judges of ancient Israel, he has sought to shield his people from an alien foe.

I wish I could tell you that the future looks bright in Central America. It does not. The way is dim. The path is uncertain. Many in our country and our Congress look away.

But change must come. As surely as it has come in Poland. In Lithuania. In Hungary. For there is a current in human affairs, and it is sweeping in the direction of liberty.

I realize that, in my official role, I am but a small part of it. But each of us can do something. It has been my honor to press for the rights, including the religious rights, of the people of Timor, against the Indonesian government; to speak out for freedom of the press in Singapore, to visit Cambodian refugees in the camps on the Thai border, where Catholic Relief Services are doing a heroic job.

I have met as well with Armando Valladares, the Cuban poet who suffered so long in Castro's hellholes and who now represents the United States at the UN Commission on Human Rights. That is a humbling experience. It makes you wonder what you could ever do to serve the cause of freedom as well as this man, whose lifetime of torture only reaffirmed his faith and emboldened his defense of human life.

Yes, there are still heroes in the world, if we know where to look for them. A Curate from Krakow can make the world spin in new directions. A steel worker in Gdansk can change the course of history. A housewife in the Philippines can give a whole new dynamic to democracy. The brave men and women of El Salvador, peasants in the countryside and workers in the city, can defy a communist reign of terror to vote in free elections, to reclaim their country and, yes, their future.

It is an honor to stand with them, to stand with all, in places high or lowly, who assert the imperative of justice and the axiom of freedom.

There are heroes as well here at home, in our own midst, in every household where parents are trying to build a better life for their children, often against tremendous odds. But I need not tell this audience about that. You know that, if Father McGivney were here today, he would be awfully proud of his Knights. And I must say, I am too.

Thank you.

INTRODUCTION OF A DRAFT BILL REFLECTING THE RECONCILIATION PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS TO DATE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing a bill containing the legislative language of all provisions that have been approved by the Committee on Ways and Means as part of our reconciliation bill, with the exception of the committee's revisions to the Medicare Catastrophic Health Insurance Program. These latter revisions are currently being drafted by staff. In some minor instances, the draft bill reflects technical drafting revisions which the staff intends to officially raise to the committee members' attention when our reconciliation markup reconvenes in September.

Several members of the committee noted during markup that they may wish to offer additional technical corrections to previously enacted legislation. I am also informed that the committee staff will present additional technical corrections for consideration by the committee in September. It is not my intention to preclude consideration of such additional technical corrections.

I want to emphasize that I am introducing this bill today as a courtesy to all Members of the House and the interested public. However, I also want to emphasize that the provisions in this draft bill are considered closed. It is not my intention to reopen or revisit the substantive policy decisions reflected in this bill. Rather, I believe it is appropriate to publish the legislative language so that necessary clarifications or technical modifications can be identified and accommodated prior to the committee's official reporting of these provisions to the House Budget Committee in September.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, due to the funeral of a close personal friend, I am forced to miss the remainder of today's agenda.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the Senate would move quickly today to vote on the savings and loan bill and the debt limit bill. I had hoped that we would have completed our work before I must leave. Unfortunately, I must leave this Chamber before I am able to vote. Mr. Speaker, had I been present, I would have voted for the new conference agreement on H.R. 1278, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act: the savings and loan bill.

ATTEMPTED TAKEOVER OF BAT INDUSTRIES

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern for the continued leveraging of corporate America by takeover raids whose thinly veiled purpose is to enhance the raiders' personal wealth, and not to create any real "wealth" in jobs or productivity for the American economy.

The latest in a seemingly endless wave of noncash leveraged buyouts involves the attempted acquisition of the British holding company BAT Industries by three foreign financiers. If successful, the acquisition would probably lead to the dislocation—and even dismantling—of a number of well-known American companies in BAT's U.S. subsidiary. These companies include Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Field's Farmers Insurance Group, Brown & Williamson and Appleton Papers. Together, these companies employ 55,000 American workers, insure over 11.5 million policyholders, and do business in over 40 States.

We are all too familiar with the financial escapades of one of the financiers—Sir James Goldsmith. In previous takeover forays into the U.S. marketplace, Goldsmith succeeded in virtually dismantling Crown Zellerbach and Diamond International, and later, even succeeded in making old-line Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. pay excessive greenmail to ward off his attack.

The feeding frenzy of coporate raiders must come to an end if America is to overcome its trade and fiscal woes. The laissez-faire attitude of the executive branch toward takeovers during the past 9 years is indeed reaping a sad harvest for American industry. You can be assured that I intend to monitor very closely developments in this new assault on American workers, management, and consumers.

EQUAL FINANCING OPPORTUNITIES FOR SMALL BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation on behalf of myself and several of my colleagues on the Small Business Committee, including the ranking minority member, JOE MCDADE. This bill will provide the same opportunities to small businesses to obtain financing as the Federal Government has long provided to many other sectors of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, the small business sector—the most dynamic sector of our economy—is also the least able to obtain financing on its own. The very nature of small business, being independently owned and operated, separates it from the banking community. Over 35 years ago Congress established the Small Business Administration in 1953 to provide a mechanism to assist in overcoming this financial hurdle.

Over the years, SBA has evolved from an Agency which made loans to small business on a direct basis, that is, the Government itself put up the money needed as loan capital, to one where it simply guarantees part of a loan made by a financial institution.

In the intervening years, the program has worked well. But during this time the number of small businesses has exploded. There are more than 18 million small businesses today, and they are simply too numerous to be financed by the SBA, especially in light of today's budget constraints.

We must establish a mechanism to involve the private sector more directly. Now is the time to establish a Government Sponsored Enterprise for Small Businesses.

In addition to targeted Federal loan programs, other industries have been helped through the establishment of a Government Sponsored Enterprise or GSE. The first of these was the Federal National Mortgage Association, or Fannie Mae, which was established to assist the housing industry in 1938. Since then we have added six other government sponsored enterprises or GSE's: The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation or Freddie Mac, the Federal Home Loan Banks, the Student Loan Marketing Association or Sallie Mae, the Financing Corporation of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, the Banks of the Farm Credit System, and finally last year a new mechanism for financing agriculture, the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation or Farmer Mac.

All of these GSE's are built around the same basic framework. They are chartered by the Federal Government to target financing to a particular industry or for a particular purpose. Although federally chartered, they are owned by their shareholders and are run by a board of directors which generally has some membership on the board selected by the Federal Government to represent the Government's interest.

These entities are not part of the Federal Government. Their activities are not part of the Federal budget process; and their debts are not guaranteed by the Federal Government. Private investors provide money to them with the Federal Government standing ready, if the need arises and is justified, and subject to the appropriation of funds, to possibly step in and provide financial assistance to them. This contingency or backstop has never been utilized for any of the other GSE's and hopefully it never will be.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that a government sponsored enterprise for small business is long past due. There are numerous investors with sufficient capital to fill the financial needs of our Nation's small businesses, but we need to provide a catalyst to bring together private investors and the small businesses through our Nation's banking system.

Basically what I am proposing is that financial institutions be authorized to make private loans to small businesses. These loans could then be sold to the small business government sponsored enterprise which in turn would resell them or packages of them to private investors. I believe there are a sufficient number of these private investors that we could largely satisfy small business credit needs. It would not be, however, a substitute for the SBA program as there would continue to be a number of small businesses which did not have the financial standing to participate in financial markets without some type of direct government support in the way of a guarantee. Thus I see this new mechansim as a supplement to the current SBA programs.

Finally, the bill would also incorporate a provision which would privatize the system of providing capital to small business investment companies which, in turn, provide venture capital to small businesses and minority small businesses. This part of my bill is very similar to legislation which I introduced in the last Congress, and which was approved by the Small Business Committee, to establish a new Corporation for Small Business Investment or COSBI.

Mr. Speaker, I am attaching to my statement a short summary of the provisions of the bill and I urge my other colleagues to examine it carefully and lend their support. I expect that the Small Business Committee will conduct hearings on this measure after Congress returns from the August break.

SUMMARY

(A bill to facilitate the providing of loan capital to and investments in small business concerns, and for other purposes)

TITLE I—VELDA SUE

The legislation would establish a federally chartered but privately owned corporation called the Venture Enhancement and Loan Development Administration for Smaller Undercapitalized Enterprises (Velda Sue) which would do for small business what Fannie Mae does for housing.

Private lending institutions are basically short-term lenders and are unable to make long-term commitments, and in some cases simply do not have the available capital to make loans to small businesses or in the case of smaller banks have loan limitations which limit loan size. As a result, small business credit needs are going unmet in the private sector. This bill basically would bring together small businesses and their long term credit needs with institutional investors who have funds which could satisfy this need.

The Corporation would be operated by a permanent Board of Directors of 15 members (six being elected by the shareholders, three being elected by the shareholders of COSBI (see title II), one being selected by the Trustees of the MESBIC Trust (see title II), and five being appointed by the President). Stock in Velda Sue would be purchased by financial institutions which would seek capital from Velda Sue.

A minimum of $30 million in stock sales would be required before Velda Sue could commence business.

Basically, Velda Sue would create a secondary market for both small business loans and seed capital provided to small business investment companies under title II. For purposes of loan or venture capital, a small business would be defined as one which, in addition to being independently owned and operated and not dominant in its field of operations, has a net worth of $8 million or less, and annual net, after-tax income of $2.5 million or less.

Velda Sue would create a secondary market either by purchasing the underlying paper and packaging it in pools and issuing its own securities backed by these pools, or by guaranteeing securities issued by loan poolers or by COSBI, provided it is backed either by these loans or by SBIC debentures guaranteed by COSBI. This paper would be sold to institutional private investors such as pension funds probably at an interest rate of less than 1 point more than that paid by the U.S. Treasury.

Velda Sue would develop uniform standards for the loans. In order to establish a market and to promote quality loans, the Board would specify minimum standards for them which would include: a maximum principal amount; a maximum term not to exceed 30 years in the case of land or facilities and 10 years in the case of equipment; a requirement that the loan be fully amortized; a requirement that the loan not be in excess of 90% of the value of the asset; and a requirement that the loan be secured by a first mortgage position on the collateral.

If these conditions were met, the Corporation could buy 80% of the loan with the originating lender retaining 20%.

In addition, the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized and directed to supervise the financial safety and soundness of Velda Sue. In essence, he would regulate its operations.

Any paper issued by Velda Sue or guaranteed by it would not be federally guaranteed, although its issuance would be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In addition, in his discretion and subject to the appropriation of funds, the Secretary of the Treasury, as a backstop, would be authorized to purchase up to $1.5 billion in Velda Sue paper, i.e., if Velda Sue needed additional federal money, the government might provide it if the need was justified.

The Corporation would be designed to be self supporting and would be required to establish a reserve to pay any losses it might sustain. These reserves would be funded by the imposition of guarantee fees not to exceed 2% of any loan guaranteed, 1% of any SBIC debenture guaranteed, and ½ of 1% of any security representing a pool of these loans or debentures.

In the case of a default in SBIC debentures or COSBI debentures representing a security interest therein, the issuing SBIC would first be liquidated as to all of its private capital, then COSBI would be liable for any shortfall; and only after all COSBI assets and capital were utilized would resort be made to the Velda Sue reserves.

Finally, Velda Sue would be prohibited by statute from incurring more obligations than an amount equal to 30 times the amount of its capital. Since a separate limitation would be imposed upon COSBI obligations, they would not be counted for purposes of this limitation.

TITLE II—COSBI

Under existing law, SBA licenses privately-owned companies to provide venture capital to small businesses. These licensees are known as "SBICs" or Small Business Investment Companies unless they specialize in providing assistance to socially or disadvantaged small businesses in which case they are known as "MESBICs" or Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Companies. These licensees generally must have at least $1 million in private capital invested, and they then may obtain additional capital by issuing debentures which are guaranteed by SBA and are now sold to private investors instead of to the Federal Financing Bank (part of the Treasury Department) as in the past. MESBICs may obtain up to three point subsidy on their debentures and in addition may sell preferred stock to SBA.

In fiscal year 1989, SBA is authorized to guarantee $118 million in SBIC debentures (down from $233 in fiscal year 1988) and to provide MESBIC assistance of another $36 million.

The SBIC/MESBIC industry has two major problems with the current program. First, they complain of over regulation and continual changes in it. Second, they complain of lack of an assured supply of matching capital from the Federal government, particularly in the last decade with its repeated budget cuts. This lack of funding and the threat of more cuts hampers their ability to make the needed long-term investments.

The legislation would establish a federally chartered but privately owned Corporation for Small business Investment (COSBI) which would be operated by a permanent board of directors of fifteen members (nine being elected by the shareholders, one being elected by the MESBIC Trust, and five being appointed by the President). Existing licensees or new companies who wish to affiliate with COSBI would be required to purchase stock in the corporation in an amount equal to 1 percent of their private capital and outstanding debentures guaranteed by SBA, and COSBI would be authorized to require them to purchase more stock in an amount equal to 1% of any increase therein, plus 1% of any new financial assistance provided to them through COSBI. Those existing licensees not electing to affiliate with the new corporation would go out of existence within two years after the repayment of any outstanding debentures guaranteed by SBA, and SBA would cease having regulatory authority over the SBIC/MESBIC industries.

COSBI would contract with SBA to service or handle the collection of outstanding debentures guaranteed by SBA and now held by the Federal Financing Bank or private investors. The fee would be 2% of the principal except that, if the debentures are in liquidation the fee would be 3% of the principal and interest as more work would be involved.

COSBI would be required to sell a minimum of $20 million in stock before it could commence business.

COSBI could obtain capital to provide to its shareholders by issuing securities to private investors. This COSBI paper would not be federally guaranteed, although its issuance would be subject to the approval of Velda Sue. As an alternative, COSBI could sell the SBIC debentures or pools of these debentures through Velda Sue which would also guarantee the paper. Ultimately these obligations would be sold to private institutional investors at an interest rate probably about 1 point over the rate paid by the U.S. Treasury.

Velda Sue would supervise COSBI as to financial safety and soundness. In essence, COSBI would be regulated by another Corporation which is itself a government sponsored enterprise which would be regulated by the Department of the Treasury.

In order to promote and assist minority small businesses, a MESBIC type trust (governed by five trustees) would be established within COSBI. The trust would be funded by transferring to it the existing portfolio of MESBIC debentures and preferred stock which SBA now holds (about $300 million). It would also be authorized an appropriation of $41 million per year for 10 years. The trust would provide debenture subsidies to and purchase preferred stock from special SBICs, i.e., those which provide assistance to socially or economically disadvantaged small businesses. The trust would terminate in fifty years, at which time its assets would be given to the Secretary of the Treasury.

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.
